ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

A collaborative effort such as this is motivated by and needs to give recognition to various sources of encouragement and inspiration. Foremost, our thanks go to all the participants in this project and their dedication and fruitful cooperation throughout, and we also happily extend these thanks to the friendly staff and our generous and patient editors at Palgrave, Tomas René and Ben Doyle. We would like to acknowledge the insights we gained from many discussions with colleagues and students in Augsburg, Tübingen, Freiburg, and Johannesburg during conference panels, seminars, and master classes on literary and cultural theory. Finally, our warm thanks go to both teams of research staff at our home universities—Despina Repa, Julia Rössler, Elisabeth Schmitt, Christina Schönberger, Ricarda Sorg, Korbinian Stöckl, and, especially, Martin Riedelsheimer on the Augsburg side; Eva Maria Rettner, Bianca Klose, Nina Plachta, and Philipp Mulhaupt on the Tübingen side—for their reliability, diligence, creativity, and their perfectly cheerful mood without which the editorial preparation of this volume would have been impossible. As always, any errors and shortcomings, of course, remain all ours.

On a final note, we should like to express our sadness about and sympathy over the sudden death of one of our contributors. Herbert Grabes, Professor of English and American Literature at the University of Giessen, Germany, died on 5 December 2015, aged 79. Professor Grabes was a literary scholar and a philosopher who for many years played an important role in the advancement of literary and cultural theory in Germany and abroad. We shall miss him.
