Acknowledgements

This collection is based on the proceedings of a symposium held at Queen Mary, University of London, in March 2013 on the subject of Feminism, Influence and Inheritance and we would like to thank all the delegates and speakers who attended that event and contributed to making it such a rich and exciting occasion. Particular thanks are owed to Anna Kretschmer, Rob Waters, Nadia Atia, Katie Fleming, Suzanne Hobson, Barbara Taylor and Cora Kaplan. We are very grateful to the English Department at Queen Mary for the generous funding that made this event possible.

It has been a pleasure to work with Peter Carey and Paula Kennedy at Palgrave who have been unstintingly helpful. We are also grateful to Palgrave's anonymous reader for their constructive criticism and supportive reader's report.

Finally, we are deeply grateful to Michèle Barrett and Jacqueline Rose for their intellectual generosity and for the rigorous and imaginative example they set us as feminist scholars.

Notes on Contributors

Prudence Chamberlain is a researcher whose practice-based and critical work draws on feminism, affect theory and experimental poetics. Focusing on lesser known modernists, including Mina Loy, and the American avant-garde, particularly the New York School and Black Mountain School, her work considers the possibilities of politically focused experimental poetry. She is currently a visiting lecturer in Poetic Practice at Royal Holloway University and has done readings of her creative work at POLYply, Runnymede Literary Festival, Hi-Zero and as part of The Enemies Project.

Lydia Fellgett is an AHRC-funded doctoral candidate at the University of East Anglia. Her thesis is on the novels of the author and scholar Betty Miller (1910–1965).

Niall Gildea is a PhD student and teaching assistant in the Department of English at Queen Mary, University of London. His thesis focuses on the controversy attendant on the proposal in 1992 to award Jacques Derrida an Honorary Doctorate of Letters at Cambridge University.

Emily J. Hogg researches the intersections between contemporary human rights discourse and contemporary literature. She completed her PhD, focused on the writing of Nadine Gordimer, Goretti Kyomuhendo and Antjie Krog, at Queen Mary, University of London, in 2014.

Clara Jones completed a PhD on Virginia Woolf's literary and political practice at Queen Mary, University of London, and is now Lecturer in Modern Literature at King's College London. She is the author of a number of articles on Woolf including most recently 'Virginia Woolf's 1931 "Cook Sketch"' in Woolf Studies Annual 2014, which concerns a previously unpublished sketch by Woolf written entirely in the voice of a domestic cook.

Marion Shaw is Emeritus Professor of English at Loughborough University. Her research interests are in nineteenth-century literature and women's writing, particularly that of the interwar period. She is the author of a biography, The Clear Stream, of the Yorkshire novelist and social reformer, Winifred Holtby. Before being appointed Professor and Head of Department of English and Drama at Loughborough in 1993, Marion was a member of the English Department at Hull University. In 1972 Marion and two colleagues introduced the first university Women's Studies programme in English, and later she became the first editor of the Journal of Gender Studies.
