

Palgrave Studies in Adaptation and Visual Culture

Series Editors

Julie Grossman, Le Moyne College, Syracuse, NY, USA

R. Barton Palmer, Atlanta, GA, USA

This series addresses how adaptation functions as a principal mode of text production in visual culture. What makes the series distinctive is its focus on visual culture as both targets and sources for adaptations, and a vision to include media forms beyond film and television such as videogames, mobile applications, interactive fiction and film, print and nonprint media, and the avant-garde. As such, the series will contribute to an expansive understanding of adaptation as a central, but only one, form of a larger phenomenon within visual culture. Adaptations are texts that are not singular but complexly multiple, connecting them to other pervasive plural forms: sequels, series, genres, trilogies, authorial oeuvres, appropriations, remakes, reboots, cycles and franchises. This series especially welcomes studies that, in some form, treat the connection between adaptation and these other forms of multiplicity. We also welcome proposals that focus on aspects of theory that are relevant to the importance of adaptation as connected to various forms of visual culture.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Firstly, I would like to thank the industry participants whose insights form the basis of this book, and to whom I will be eternally grateful for their encouragement, enthusiasm and wisdom. This refers not only to the named interviewees included in the final version of this work, who allowed their words to be published, but also to the various others who generously gave up their time to talk with me about their work and to provide a valuable context for my research. In haphazard order (and inevitably forgetting someone), these include: Preethi Mavahalli, Laura Lankester, Belinda Campbell, Gub Neal, Sarah Phelps, Andrew Davies, Debbie Horsfield, Vinay Patel, Gemma Jackson, Grant Montgomery, Olly Blackburn, Sarah Harding, Kelly Valentine Hendry, Rachel Freck, Rakie Ayola, Adeel Akhtar, Charlie Higson, Andy Pryor, Ashley Pharoah, David Lascelles, Hannah Greig, John Wyver, Jeff Tessler, Mandip Gill, Julie Hesmondhalgh, Marianne Agertoft, Michael Keillor, Vadim Jean and Vinette Robinson. Without the support of these people, there would be no book. I would also like to thank Golda Rosheuvel for endorsing the book by giving her permission to include her image on the front cover.

Thanks also go to the many colleagues who have supported me through the years this book has been in the making: Kristyn Gorton, Andrew Tudor, Tom Cantrell, Kate McNicholas Smith, Michael Goddard, Judith Buchanan, Michael Cordner, Douglas S. Kern, Ollie Jones, Nik Morris, Louise Cope, Rinella Cere, Isabel Ruiz-Mora, David Hoser, Rob Benfield, Isabel Morgan, Jane Thorburn, Ged Maguire, Douglas McNaughton and Ellen Roseblade. I would like to give special thanks in this regard to Matt Hills, who offered me some advice in the early stages of writing which he probably thought nothing of again but which completely changed my plans for the book. I would also like to thank Sarah Cardwell, Shannon Wells-Lassagne and Christine Geraghty for their preceding published work, as it has had a significant influence on my own contribution. Moreover, I am grateful to those at the University of Westminster and the University's research centre, CREAM, in particular May Adadol-Ingawanij, Neal White, Rosie Thomas, Gregory Sporton and Michaela O'Brien, for supporting me in recent years with hours to complete this research. My students, past and present, deserve equal thanks, for continually pushing me to see television in new ways.

To the team at Palgrave Macmillan—Lina Aboujieb, Emily Wood, and Ashwini Elango—who trusted me to get there in the end, many thanks for your patience and support.

On a more personal level, there have been people who have proved priceless to me in completing this book: Patricia Hogg, Sandra Edwards, Gary Edwards, Jack Smith, Stuart Cooke, Catherine Cooke, Ellen Cooke, Sammy Cooke, Harry Cooke, Nick Shay, Jason Ginda and Marc Lightfoot. There is, of course, extra-special thanks due to one person, my wife Charlotte, who really should be sainted.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Dr Christopher Hogg is Senior Lecturer in Television Theory at the University of Westminster, UK. Chris specialises in television drama and television acting, with a particular interest in bringing together industry and academic perspectives. He is the co-author (with Dr Tom Cantrell, the University of York) of the book Acting in British Television (Palgrave Macmillan, 2017), and the co-editor (also with Cantrell) of the collection Exploring Television Acting (Bloomsbury, 2018).
