

Studies in Childhood and Youth

This series offers a multi-disciplinary perspective on exploring childhood and youth as social phenomena that are culturally located, articulating children's and young people's perspectives on their everyday lives. The aim of the series will be to continue to develop these theoretical perspectives through publishing both monographs and edited collections that present cutting-edge research within the area of childhood studies. It will provide a key locus for work within the field that is currently published across a diverse range of outlets and will help consolidate and develop childhood studies as a discrete field of scholarship.

An earlier version of sections of the Introduction (Chap. 1) was published as “Rethinking ‘Virtual’ Youth: Young People and Life Writing” in Mediated Youth Cultures, Andy Griffiths and Brady Robards (eds). New York: Palgrave. 77–94. A version of Chap. 4 was published as “Ethical Dialogues: Youth, Memoir, Trauma” in a/b: Auto/Biography Studies 30.2 (2015): 271–288.

Materials from the Introduction and Chap. 6 were presented as conference papers at International Auto/Biography Association Conference, Australian National University (2012). Materials from Chaps. 4 and 7 were presented at the International Auto/Biography Association Conference, Banff (2014). Material from Chap. 8 was presented at the Auto/Biography Association Americas Chapter Conference, Ann Arbor (2015).

We would like to acknowledge the supportive and rigorous environment of the International Auto/Biography Association, where many elements of this project were first explored. We thank our colleagues who provided generous feedback on our presentations and support for the project. We want to particularly thank Sarah Brophy, Kylie Cardell, Leigh Gilmore, Craig Howes, Claire Lynch, Laurie McNeill, Aimée Morrison, Julie Rak, Candida Rifkind, Sidonie Smith, Julia Watson, Gillian Whitlock and John Zuern, who offered critique, useful advice and tips that have proven invaluable to the project. The work of these scholars has provided inspiration throughout.

We would like to thank the reviewers of the manuscript for their considered engagement with the project and its aims, and the staff at Palgrave Macmillan, particularly Harriet Barker, for their support for the project.

Anna would like to thank Kate for proposing this collaboration, for her generous questioning and her commitment to ethical scholarship. Thank you to the archivists whose knowledge, expertise and patience were fundamental to the research that informs this book: Lisa Darms and Rachel Greer at the Fales Library at New York University, and Jenna Freedman and Shannon O’Neill at Barnard College Library. Thanks also to the artists who granted permission for their work to be reproduced: Kathleen Hanna, Miriam Basilio, Emma D, Jami Sailor and Amanda. My work on this project has benefited enormously from conversations with and provocations from Paul Byron, Catherine Strong, Sara Rosa Espi, Luke Sinclair, Shane McGrath, Thomas Blatchford, Jon Dale, Lauren Berlant and Julie Rak. The support of my colleagues at Monash has been vital; thank you to Ali Alizadeh, Robin Gerster, Sue Kossew, Melinda Harvey and Simone Murray. Thanks must also go to the Faculty of Arts at Monash University for financial support for this project.

A final thank you must go to Johannes Klabbers, who wrote his own book alongside this one.

Kate would like to thank Anna for being a wonderful collaborator, and generous and inspirational colleague throughout the development of this project. Thank you to the Faculty of Education, Humanities and Law at Flinders University for their financial support of this project. Thank you to my Flinders colleagues and/or members of the Flinders Life Narrative Research Group who have acted as readers, listened to presentations or provided general encouragement along the way: Kylie Cardell, Lisa Bennett, Pamela Graham, Tully Barnett, Emma Maguire, Hannah Kent, Threasa Meads, Amy Matthews, Erin Sebo and Patrick Allington.

Finally, thank you to my partner Danni and to my children Ella, Josh and Darcy who always provide the right dose of inspiration, distraction and encouragement.
