Series Editors: Katarzyna Marciniak, Anikó Imre, Áine O’Healy The Global Cinema series publishes innovative scholarship on the transnational themes, industries, economies, and aesthetic elements that increasingly connect cinemas around the world. It promotes theoretically transformative and politically challenging projects that rethink film studies from cross-cultural, comparative perspectives, bringing into focus forms of cinematic production that resist nationalist or hegemonic frameworks. Rather than aiming at comprehensive geographical coverage, it foregrounds transnational interconnections in the production, distribution, exhibition, study, and teaching of film. Dedicated to global aspects of cinema, this pioneering series combines original perspectives and new methodological paths with accessibility and coverage. Both ‘global’ and ‘cinema’ remain open to a range of approaches and interpretations, new and traditional. Books published in the series sustain a specific concern with the medium of cinema but do not defensively protect the boundaries of film studies, recognizing that film exists in a converging media environment. The series emphasizes a historically expanded rather than an exclusively presentist notion of globalization; it is mindful of repositioning ‘the global’ away from a US-centric/Eurocentric grid, and remains critical of celebratory notions of ‘globalizing film studies.’

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This book is the result of the collaborative efforts of a number of individuals and institutional support. I would like to thank the editorial staff at Palgrave Macmillan. They have been great supporters of my work and I consider them crucial collaborators in this project. In Cuba, I would like to extend special thanks to the staff at the Foundation for New Latin American Cinema for generously allowing me access to their audio-visual and textual archive in Havana. I want to make special mention of Caridad Cumaná, who was key in providing me with archival access in Havana, DVD copies of key Cuban films, as well as important intellectual dialogue and support. I would also like to thank Zaira Zarza and the staff at the Ludwig Foundation in Havana for making indispensable copies of rare Cuban films available to me on DVD. Finally, I want to acknowledge the many informal conversations that I have had with Cuban artists and intellectuals such as Ernesto Oroza, Jorge Yglesias, Enrique Colina, René Francisco, Sandra Ceballos, Jorge de León, Victor Fowler, Boris González, and Aristide E. Hernández. Their collective insights into the history of Cuban film, media, and art helped to refine and lend nuance to my understanding of film, art, and culture in Cuba. In North America, I would like to thank the knowledgeable library staff at York University, University of Toronto, SUNY Buffalo, and the Latin American Archive at Tulane University for helping me access important archival texts and photos related to Cuban film and cultural history.

My research has benefited from correspondence and critical dialogue with a great number of colleagues from across disciplines. These faculty members have commented on my work at various stages of its development at academic conferences or informally in private conversation and correspondence. They include: Cristina Venegas, Michael Chanan, Ann Marie Stock, Ana Lopez, Michael O’Sullivan, Alejandro Campos-Garcia, Laura Zoe Humphreys, Masha Salazkina, Brian Price, Meghan Sutherland, Susan Lord, Tamara Falicov, Josh Malitsky, Scott MacKenzie, Mette Hjort, George Yúdice, and Hamid Naficy. I must also mention the anonymous referees that have commented on various Cuban-related journal articles that I have published over the years. Their comments have helped round out my knowledge of Cuban history and politics as well as sharpened my writing and analytical skills. Their work is evident in this text. To this end, I thank the editors and anonymous referees at Cinema Journal, Canadian Journal of Film Studies, Transfers: International Journal of Mobility Studies, and Public.

I would also like to mention my PhD dissertation committee at York University, which sowed the seeds for this book. I thank Janine Marchessault, Kevin Dowler, and Michael Zryd for their invaluable critical comments and professional advice throughout the doctoral process. Their broad range of expertise has contributed in part to the interdisciplinary frameworks that inform much of this book. I make a special mention of my supervisor, Michael Zryd, for his patience and steady commitment that enriched my thinking, research, and writing at all of the stages of the PhD and beyond.

This book would have been impossible without the space, time, and financial support that I received as a result of my postdoctoral fellowship at the Critical Media Lab (CML), University of Waterloo. In addition to giving me time following my PhD to reflect and refine my dissertation into book form, the Critical Media Lab also informed new directions in my research which culminated in Chap. 6, One Must Invent. CML provided me with a dynamic interdisciplinary community within which to present and test ideas from this chapter. They also offered a space for intellectual and creative risk that is evident in some of my choices for this book. I make special note of Marcel O’Gorman and Beth Coleman for inviting me to collaborate in meaningful and always surprising ways at the CriMe Lab. My two years there were a gift.

Finally, I must acknowledge the great support, both moral financial, that I have received from my family: Julia Balaisis, Elise Balaisis, Olivia Balaisis, Ludmila Balaisis, Jim Biros, and Nicole Biros. I note in particular my frequent Cuban research collaborator and travel-mate, Michael O’Sullivan. He helped guide me through some of the more challenging logistical issues one faces when researching in Cuba, as well as sharing key research advice from his extensive academic experience in Latin America.

This book owes its greatest gratitude to the tireless support of my wife and intellectual interlocutor Shana MacDonald. Her keen insights into the core ideas in the book, as well as her willingness to fix my most odious editing dilemmas are a small token of her incredible generosity, patience, and care. It would not have been completed without her. I dedicate this book to her and our two darling boys: Will and Alex.
