New Studies in Practical Philosophy

PLATO AND MODERN MORALITY

New Studies in Practical Philosophy

General Editor: W. D. Hudson

The point of view of this series is that of contemporary analytical philosophy. Each study will deal with an aspect of moral philosophy. Particular attention will be paid to the logic of moral discourse, and the practical problems of morality. The relationship between morality and other 'universes of discourse', such as art and science, will also be explored.

Editor's Foreword

Plato's ideas about matters such as family life and education have been for centuries highly influential. Their interest and relevance remain even in modern times. In this book Mrs Huby has presented a clear exposition of Plato's teaching on a number of moral problems and then attempted to show what light this may shed on the particular problems of our age.

Both the student of philosophy and the more general reader will find the following pages full of information and interest.
