It was a commonplace of nineteenth-century fiction that criminals about to be hanged saw in their mind's eye a succession of faces of those who had helped and hindered them along the road to perdition. So it is when a book reaches completion and its defects reflect the prophecies and warnings of wiser men.

The central part of this book started life as a Ph.D. thesis for the University of Cambridge, when I was particularly fortunate to have Professor Sir Denis Brogan and M. Adrien Dansette as my supervisors. I wish to give them my very grateful thanks and also the many others who have helped me then and in the later stages of this cautionary tale. I must particularly mention M. Yvon Bizardel, Mrs J. E. C. Bodley, Mlle Geneviève Boegner, M. Marc Bonnefous, Canon Fernand Boulard, M. Denys Cochin, Fr Joseph Dehergne, S.J., Fr Pierre Delattre, S.J., M. Marcel Faucon, His late Eminence Cardinal Feltin, M. Jacques Gadille, the late M. Paul Grunebaum-Ballin, Mlle d'Haussonville, the Abbé Patrick Heidsieck, Professor Douglas Johnson, M. Jean Jolly, Fr Angelo Martini, S.J., M. Jean-Marie Mayeur, Mlle Louise Violette Méjan, Dr Peter Morris, M. Pierre Sorlin, Fr Pierre Touveneraud, the Abbé de Vigan, Mr J. M. K. Vyvyan, Dr James E. Ward, and the indefatigable Mrs Waring and her band of typists. Nor can I sufficiently thank my parents for their constant help and encouragement.

As with all work abroad, finance might have been a major problem. The initial postgraduate research was kindly made possible by Trinity College, Cambridge, with an Exhibition and the Earl of Derby Studentship. The British Institute in Paris subsequently awarded me a Leverhulme Scholarship, and I was thereafter the recipient of several research grants from the University of Kent, for which I am very grateful. More recently the British Academy provided me with a generous Visiting Fellowship in the spring of 1972.

As everyone knows, the wives of academics lead the life of Eurydice. Seeing little but their husbands' backs, they must often feel nostalgia for the pleasures of the Underworld. With more cause than most for such longings, my wife has shown a patience and endurance that has become something of a local legend.
