TEXT AND PERFORMANCE

General Editor: Michael Scott

The series is designed to introduce sixth-form and undergraduate students to the themes, continuing vitality and performance of major dramatic works. The attention given to production aspects is an element of special importance, responding to the invigoration given to literary study by the work of leading contemporary critics.

The prime aim is to present each play as a vital experience in the mind of the reader – achieved by analysis of the text in relation to its themes and theatricality. Emphasis is accordingly placed on the relevance of the work to the modern reader and the world of today. At the same time, traditional views are presented and appraised, forming the basis from which a creative response to the text can develop.

In each volume, Part One: Text discusses certain key themes or problems, the reader being encouraged to gain a stronger perception both of the inherent character of the works and also of variations in interpreting them. Part Two: Performance examines the ways in which these themes or problems have been handled in modern productions, and the approaches and techniques employed to enhance the plays' accessibility to modern audiences.

An outline of the plays' major sources is given, and a concluding Reading List offers guidance to the student's independent study of the work.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Quotations of the text of the plays are from Arthur Miller, Collected Plays (New York, Viking Press, 1960). Additional information on quotations, paraphrases and background are in the Reading List.

For their help in making theatre reviews available to me I am grateful to the following institutions and their staffs: the Billy Rose Theatre Collection of the New York Public Library at Lincoln Center, the British Theatre Association and the Newspaper Library of the British Library at Colindale. The background information on China provided by Elizabeth Wichmann and Liu Dan has been very helpful. I also wish to thank Barbara, who was there at the start and present at the conclusion; her assistance has been major.

GENERAL EDITOR'S PREFACE

For many years a mutual suspicion existed between the theatre director and the literary critic of drama. Although in the first half of the century there were important exceptions, such was the rule. A radical change of attitude, however, has taken place over the last thirty years. Critics and directors now increasingly recognise the significance of each other's work and acknowledge their growing awareness of interdependence. Both interpret the same text, but do so according to their different situations and functions. Without the director, the designer and the actor, a play's existence is only partial. They revitalise the text with action, enabling the drama to live fully at each performance. The academic critic investigates the script to elucidate its textual problems, understand its conventions and discover how it operates. He may also propose his view of the work, expounding what he considers to be its significance.

Dramatic texts belong therefore to theatre and to literature. The aim of the 'Text and Performance' series is to achieve a fuller recognition of how both enhance our enjoyment of the plays. Each volume follows the same basic pattern. Part One provides a critical introduction to the plays under discussion, using the techniques and criteria of the literary critic in examining the manner in which the work operates through language, imagery and action. Part Two takes the enquiry further into the plays' theatricality by focusing on selected productions of recent times so as to illustrate points of contrast and comparison in the interpretation of different directors and actors, and to demonstrate how the plays have worked on the modern stage. In this way the series seeks to provide a lively and informative introduction to major plays in their text and performance.
