Preface

Those who are best qualified to write a book on this subject are far too busy to do so. Some of them have nevertheless been unstinting with their help and encouragement. Although I have relied throughout upon published material, the condensation which has been necessary to put it into an ordered and readable form raised serious dangers of inaccuracy, misinterpretation and false emphasis. Without help, it would have been rash for an outsider to attempt the task of providing businessmen with an insight into the inner workings of competition policy in Britain.

My heartfelt thanks go in particular to Martin Howe of the Office of Fair Trading and to Alan Blair and Noel Ing of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for their painstaking and thought-provoking comments.

I have sought to inform rather than to criticise. The views and judgements which are nevertheless included are my own, and not those of the people who have helped me; and that, I am sure, will be true also of any errors.

Nick Gardner
