For Olive and Vivian

Written in the understanding that birth, like death, is a process that should not, in ordinary circumstances, be minimised, denied, manipulated or controlled.

Acknowledgements

This book initially grew out of research concerned with postnatal depression, stillbirth and neonatal death. Many discussions were held by a group of researchers concerned with Women and Welfare at Goldsmiths College, University of London. We would like to thank the group for their interest, their contributions and their patience. Many women who had suffered from postnatal depression were also kind enough to agree to contribute. We would like to thank them all for their honesty and their courage in speaking openly about an extremely painful experience. We hope that they will feel fairly represented by what is written here and that their experiences will be better understood.

This work has also benefited greatly from the many other researchers who have written about this area in an attempt to promote a more open discussion of women's experiences of postnatal depression. We would like to thank them all.

We owe particular thanks to Lesley Taylor for her support and her valuable work concerning the experiences of women who have given birth preterm. We also owe thanks to Carole Walker and Vivian Dhaliwal: to Carole for her support and practical assistance, and to Vivian for her valuable contributions and secretarial support.

Jane Littlewood would also like to thank Malcolm Nicholas for his resolute support and his valuable comments upon earlier versions of this manuscript.

Every effort has been made to trace all the copyright holders but, if any have been inadvertently overlooked, the publishers will be pleased to make the necessary arrangement at the first opportunity.
