NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Professor David Brandon is Professor of Community Care at Anglia Polytechnic University, Chelmsford. He was a social work practitioner, a Buddhist monk and, subsequently, Regional Director of MIND (The National Association for Mental Health) before becoming a teacher and researcher. He has been an influential advocate of community and user-led services, particularly for people with learning difficulties and mental health problems.

Richard Clough is General Secretary of the Social Care Association, an independent organisation which has long been an influential force in the development of policy and practice in residential care in Britain.

Professor Bleddyn Davies is Director of the Personal Social Services Research Unit at the University of Kent and the London School of Economics, which, for two decades, has been internationally influential in research in community care policy and practice.

Mervyn Eastman is Director of Social Services in the London Borough of Enfield. For many years, he was a practitioner and manager of services for older people, with a particular interest in elder abuse – conducting one of the earliest British studies of elder abuse and subsequently writing widely on the subject.

Dr Raymond Jack is Reader in Social Work at Anglia Polytechnic University, Chelmsford. Following 14 years of social work practice, he has been a teacher and researcher for ten years in various universities. He has written widely on community care policy and practice.

Professor Kathleen Jones is Emeritus Professor of Social Policy at the University of York. She has been researching the role of institutions in mental health in Britain, Europe and the USA for many years and has written extensively on the implementation of community care policy and practice in relation to people with psychiatric disorders.

Leonie Kellaher is a researcher at the Centre for Environmental and Social Studies in Ageing at the University of North London. She has written widely on the influence of environmental factors on the quality of care and the quality of life for residents of residential homes.

Jo Moriarty and Enid Levin are researchers for the National Institute for Social Work, London. They are both concerned with the long-term care of elderly and disabled people and the role of residential and community care services in maintaining them. They have recently completed and published a major study of respite care services.

Professor Sally Redfern is Director of the Nursing Research Unit at Kings College, London. She has a particular interest in the support of elderly people in long-stay settings and the future role of the nursing profession in residential and community care.

Yvonne Shemmings was, for many years, a social work practitioner and subsequently senior manager of elder care services for Essex County Council. She has recently completed and published a research study on death and dying in residential homes.

Dr Naom Trieman is Assistant Director and Professor Julian Leff is Honorary Director of the 'Team for the Assessment of Psychiatric Services' (TAPS) at the Institute of Psychiatry, London University, which for almost a decade has been researching the effects of mental hospital closure on patients and community care services in London.
