Acknowledgements

I would like to acknowledge, with thanks, the encouragement and help that I have always received from colleagues in the School of Social Work at the University of East Anglia, Norwich. Many friends, colleagues, practice teachers and students on the Dip. SW programme at UEA have contributed ideas and practical examples of their experiences of community care. I would particularly like to thank Kay Shail and Bill Wivell for their interest and support throughout the writing of this book. Undertaking such a substantial piece of work and seeing it through to its conclusion would have been impossible without the computer skills of Denys McDonald and the practical help of Georgina Henry-Routledge. Finally, I would like to thank my editor Catherine Gray for her encouragement and persistence.
