Acknowledgments

Many thanks are due to my colleagues and friends who have helped this book come into being...

A special thank-you to Peggy McDonald for her tireless and creative research – from locating the name of the hacienda where Simón Bolívar died to finding the meaning (via the Web) of the pseudonym Nahui Olin.

A very special thank you also to my friend Dr. Norma Steinberg for her expertise and for being my most valuable sounding board.

Janet Bemis and Gia S. Jobin, of To The Point designers, are due special kudos for their expertise and patience in helping to bring this book into its final form.

and, thank you:

to the art experts who contributed articles for this book: Alejandro Anreus, Mary-Anne Martin, and August Uribe.

to the many libraries and museums throughout the country who provided their services and information. A special thank you to the hard-working and ever-helpful staff at the Boston Public Library's art reference department – Janice Chadbourne, Kim Tenney, Evelyn Lannon, and Cecile Gardner; to Judy Baran at the Miami Public Library's art reference department; and to Elinor Hernon of the Newton Public Library for her resourceful help in procuring obscure citations.

to my staff who worked so tirelessly entering the auction data, compiling the research data, and proofing, over and over again, the proper spelling of names and geographical sites: Peggy McDonald, Paula Jacoff, Keith Larson, and Matthew McDonald.

to my daughters Sally and Rachel for their loving support.
