The Anatomy of Capitalist Societies

Contemporary Social Theory

General Editor: ANTHONY GIDDENS

This series aims to create a forum for debate between different theoretical and philosophical traditions in the social sciences. The books included in the series will cover broad schools of thought as well as the work of particular thinkers whose ideas have had a major impact in social science, under the general title of Theoretical Traditions in the Social Sciences. The series is not limited to abstract theoretical discussion, but will also include more substantive works on contemporary capitalism, the state and politics.

Preface

I am very grateful to the following friends who read the typescript in whole or in part, and made extremely helpful comments and suggestions: Nick Abercrombie, Scott Lash, Dan Shapiro, Sylvia Walby and Alan Warde. I would also like to thank various students of mine in Lancaster with whom I have discussed various aspects of this book. I am also grateful to the Sociology Department at the University of Lancaster for providing a generally supportive intellectual environment.
