Communications and Culture

Communications has been defined as the conveying or exchanging of information and ideas. This wide definition is taken as the starting-point for this series of books, which are not bound by conventional academic divisions. The series aims to document or analyse a broad range of cultural forms and ideas.

It encompasses works from areas as esoteric as linguistics and as exoteric as television. The language of communication may be the written work or the moving picture, the static icon or the living gesture. These means of communicating can at their best blossom into and form an essential part of the other mysterious concept, culture.

There is no sharp or intended split in the series between communication and culture. On one definition, culture refers to the organisation of experience shared by members of a community, a process which includes the standards and values for judging or perceiving, for predicting and acting. In this sense, creative communication can make for a better and livelier culture.

The series reaches towards the widest possible audience. Some of the works concern themselves with activities as general as play and games; others offer a narrower focus, such as the ways of understanding the visual image. It is hoped that some moves in the transformation of the artful and the scientific can be achieved, and that both can begin to be understood by a wider and more comprehending community. Some of these books are written by practitioners – broadcasters, journalists and artists; others come from critics, scholars, scientists and historians.

The series has an ancient and laudable, though perhaps untenable, aim – an aim as old as the Greeks and as new as holography: it aspires to help heal the split between cultures, between the practitioners and the thinkers, between science and art, between the academy and life.

One of the most characteristic attitudes of the popular public towards its literature is this: the writer's name and personality do not matter, but the personality of the protagonist does. When they have entered into the intellectual life of the people, the heroes of popular literature are separated from their 'literary' origin and acquire the validity of historical figures.

This book owes a good deal to colleagues at the Open University, particularly those associated with the Mass Communication and Society and Popular Culture course teams who helped to shape the early stages of this work in many and varied ways. We are particularly grateful to our BBC colleagues, Michael Philips, Victor Lockwood and Noella Smith with whom our first work on the Bond movies began. We are also grateful to the staff and students of those institutions at which draft chapters of this study were presented. Their comments proved invaluable in helping us to see our way more clearly through the problems we were addressing. In particular, we would like to thank Terry Hawkes and Catherine Belsey at University College, Cardiff, Tom Lewis of Iowa University, John Frow at Murdoch University and Noel King at the South Australian College of Advanced Education. Our special thanks, too, to Stuart Hall for his detailed and helpful comments on the manuscript.

We could not have written the book without the help and support of our respective partners, Sue and Tim, whom we thank for their understanding and tolerance – especially over the cost of the telephone calls between Brisbane and New York to co-ordinate the writing of it. We wish we could find it in us to thank the American and Australian postal services for not losing more than 10 per cent of our correspondence, but it would stick in the throat somehow.

However, we are grateful to the School of Humanities at Griffith University for financial assistance in preparing the book, and to Pan Books and Granada Publishing for their permission to reproduce the covers for Moonraker; Diamonds are Forever and Colonel Sun. Pan Books also assisted us greatly in supplying detailed figures for the sales of the Bond novels in Britain. We also owe a very particular debt to Ian Campbell, whose Ian Fleming: A Catalogue of a Collection proved an invaluable research tool. More than that, had he not very generously allowed us to consult the rich hoard of Bondiana he has accumulated over the years, many parts of this book would not have been possible.

The authors and publishers wish to thank the following who have kindly given permission for the use of copyright material: W. H. Allen & Co. for extract from Sean Connery: His Life and Films by Michael Feenay Callan; Jonathan Cape Ltd for extracts from The James Bond Dossier by Kingsley Amis; Constable Publishers for extract from Clubland Heroes by Richard Usborne; Glidrose Productions Ltd, copyright holders, for extracts from Ian Fleming's James Bond novels with permission from Jonathan Cape Ltd for extracts from From Russia With Love, Moonraker, Dr No, Thunderball, You Only Live Twice, On Her Majesty's Secret Service, The Man with the Golden Gun, Casino Royale, Live and Let Die and Goldfinger; Macmillan Publishing Company for extracts from Moonraker, Live and Let Die, Goldfinger, Dr No and From Russia With Love; New American Library for extracts from The Man with the Golden Gun, You Only Live Twice and On Her Majesty's Secret Service; Viking Penguin Inc. for extracts from Thunderball; and Gildrose Publications Ltd for extracts from Casino Royale; Stephen Heath for extract from The Sexual Fix, Macmillan Press; Indiana University Press for extracts from The Role of the Reader by Umberto Eco; IPC Magazines Ltd for an extract from 'Glamour Girls in Bondage', Woman's Own, 30 June 1979; Murray Pollinger and Watkins/Loomis Agency on behalf of Roald Dahl for '007's Oriental Eyefuls', Playboy, June 1967. Every effort has been made to trace all the copyright-holders, but if any have been inadvertently overlooked the publishers will be pleased to make the necessary arrangement at the first opportunity.

Our thanks, finally, to Eon Productions for confirming our analysis of the nature of the copyright it holds in the Bond image. Our request for permission to use some stills from the Bond films and some publicity posters as illustrations was refused; their 'corporate attitude' to our project, we were told, was 'entirely negative'. A starker demonstration of the contradiction between the public nature of the image and its private ownership could hardly be asked for.
