Published in conjunction with the British Association of Social Workers
Series Editor: Jo Campling

BASW

Social work is at an important stage in its development. The profession is facing fresh challenges to work flexibly in fast-changing social and organisational environments. New requirements for training are also demanding a more critical and reflective, as well as more highly skilled, approach to practice.

The British Association of Social Workers has always been conscious of its role in setting guidelines for practice and in seeking to raise professional standards. The concept of the Practical Social Work series was conceived to fulfil a genuine professional need for a carefully planned, coherent series of texts that would stimulate and inform debate, thereby contributing to the development of practitioners' skills and professionalism.

Newly relaunched, the series continues to address the needs of all those who are looking to deepen and refresh their understanding and skills. It is designed for students and busy professionals alike. Each book marries practice issues and challenges with the latest theory and research in a compact and applied format. The authors represent a wide variety of experience both as educators and practitioners. Taken together, the books set a standard in their clarity, relevance and rigour.

Acknowledgements

I would like to thank the people who have helped with this book in a variety of ways. I am thinking of users or clients of social services, social workers, students and social work teachers who have shared their experiences and ideas and with whom it has been stimulating to discuss aspects of social work which are often taken for granted. Paul Armstrong, Clive Coleman, Vic Rhodes and Wilf Attenborough have been tolerant and constructive critics but cannot be held responsible for the result. Jean Steel, Heather Clarke and Pat Moody have given secretarial and administrative support, and Val Hurst gave invaluable help in completing the work.
