Preface

This book accompanies the fifth and final series of LWT/Channel Four's survey of British history, The Making of Britain. I should like to thank all those at London Weekend Television who have been involved with this series: Barry Cox, Jane Hewland, Robin Paxton, whose comments did much to shape the final version of both the series and the book, and Johanna Pool. All the contributors to the book have generously shared with me their knowledge of the twentieth century and brought to our project an enthusiasm which has made this series particularly enjoyable. A number of other scholars have also spent time discussing the twentieth century with me and I should like to thank particularly David Anderson, Linda Colley, Leonore Davidoff, Christopher Harvie, Paul Johnson, Jane Lewis, Sara Maitland, Robert Pearce, and Lavinia Warner. Linda Stradling accomplished the very extensive picture research for both the book and the series with patience and skill. Her efficiency and good humour also helped to keep the project running smoothly over the last months of preparation. I am also grateful to Pam Wilkinson who again typed the manuscript for me. Finally, throughout the five years we have worked on The Making of Britain, Pat Newbert, our Unit Manager in the Features department, and her secretary, Marcelle Ruddell, have done everything they could to solve any problems that arose. In thanks, I should like to dedicate this book to them.
