THE BUSINESS OF MEDICINE

PRIVATE HEALTH CARE IN BRITAIN

Also by Joan Higgins

The Poverty Business: Britain and America

States of Welfare: Comparative Analysis in Social Policy

Government and Urban Poverty: Inside the Policy-Making Process

(with Nicholas Deakin, John Edwards and Malcolm Wicks)

THE BUSINESS OF MEDICINE

Private Health Care in Britain

JOAN HIGGINS

M
MACMILLAN EDUCATION

© Joan Higgins 1988

Softcover reprint of the hardcover 1st edition 1988

All rights reserved. No reproduction, copy or transmission of this publication may be made without written permission.

No paragraph of this publication may be reproduced, copied or transmitted save with written permission or in accordance with the provisions of the Copyright Act 1956 (as amended), or under the terms of any licence permitting limited copying issued by the Copyright Licensing Agency, 33-4 Alfred Place, London WC1E 7DP.

Any person who does any unauthorised act in relation to this publication may be liable to criminal prosecution and civil claims for damages.

First published 1988

Published by
MACMILLAN EDUCATION LTD
Houndmills, Basingstoke, Hampshire RG21 2XS and London
Companies and representatives
throughout the world

ISBN 978-0-333-45830-3 ISBN 978-1-349-19231-1 (eBook)
DOI 10.1007/978-1-349-19231-1

Contents

Tables	vii
---------------	-----

Acknowledgements	viii
-------------------------	------

Introduction	1
Definitions	2
Themes	2
The international context	3
A personal view	4

1. Public and Private Medicine in the 1940s	6
Health services in the early twentieth century	6
Money and medicine	8
Reform and the White Paper	13
Bevan and the Bill	16
Reactions to the Bill	19
The debate on the Bill	22
From the Bill to the Act	24
After the Act	27
The lessons of history	32

2. Paying for Medicine Inside and Outside the NHS 1948–78	45
Outside the NHS	45
Charges, pay beds and the NHS	52
The Fourth Report from the Expenditure Committee, 'National Health Service Facilities for Private Patients'	60
Barbara Castle and the pay beds dispute	63
The Health Services Board	70
The impact of the pay beds dispute	72

3. The Boom Years: The Private Market After 1979	84
Changes in Government policy	84
Private insurance: boom and bust?	90
Hospitals and beds	100
The disappearing overseas patients	104
Diversification of the market	108
How is private medicine doing?	117
4. A Taste of American Medicine	124
American for-profit corporations: who they are and what they do	124
American medicine in America	139
Over-ambitious, over-bedded and over here: opposition to American corporations in Britain	146
The medical-industrial complex	155
5. Winners and Losers	163
Who are the private patients?	163
Why do patients 'go private'?	170
Who benefits from the private sector?	179
Calculating the losses	187
6. Trends and Issues in the Private Sector	198
Is small beautiful?	198
Two tiers or many?	203
Consumers and the health care market	212
Doctors, patients and money	217
The problem of equity	222
Conclusions	227
The significance of changes in the private market	227
The lessons for the NHS	230
Value for money	235
Morality and the Market	237
Bibliography	240
Index	248

Tables

2.1	The provident population: persons insured, number of subscribers and net change (BUPA, PPP and WPA), 1950–77	47
3.1	Breakdown of subscriber by purchase category (BUPA, PPP and WPA), 1977–83	95
3.2	Authorised pay beds in NHS hospitals in England, Wales and Scotland 1974–83	102

Acknowledgements

This book would never have reached completion without the support of a number of organisations and individuals.

I am particularly indebted to the Economic and Social Research Council for awarding me a Personal Research Grant (G 00 24 2023) in 1985–6, and to my colleagues at the University of Southampton who enabled me to take a year's leave to write the book. The Department of Sociology and Social Administration also provided me with financial support which was much appreciated. This enabled me to employ two research assistants, Fiona Bower and Mary Thomas, to help with the bibliographical work and piles of press cuttings. Linda Hull also gave me valuable help.

I am grateful to the many people in the private sector who so readily showed me their facilities and talked about their work. John Randle of the Association of Independent Hospitals was especially helpful in supplying statistics on changes in the private market.

Numerous other people, including Barbara Castle, MEP, discussed a wide range of relevant topics which filled gaps in my knowledge or allowed me to check ideas with their experience.

I have benefited greatly from the critical comments of colleagues on the occasions when I have talked about sections of the book and from those of anonymous readers who saw a draft of the manuscript. Steven Kennedy from Macmillan gave constructive editorial advice.

Special thanks go to Tony Rees and John Martin who read the manuscript very carefully and made detailed suggestions. I am sure the finished product – with all its flaws – is an improvement on the original, as a result of their advice. John Martin encouraged me in the research from the beginning and I am very grateful for his support.

The typing services provided by Veronica Jones Associates were extremely fast and efficient and a good advertisement for private enterprise!

My final acknowledgement is also a sort of dedication and a wish for the future. I have always felt a profound commitment to the National Health Service and to the values it represents. I was born just 21 days before it came into being and was one of its first customers for 'free' services. My parents both worked in it all their lives. I share the view of Richard Titmuss that its creation was 'the most unsordid act of British social policy in the twentieth century' (1973, p. 254). This book is written for all the people who have worked in the NHS (especially my parents and friends) and all who have benefited from its services. I trust that the developments described in these pages will never weaken the principles upon which the Service was founded and that the generation which saw its flowering will not see its demise.

JOAN HIGGINS