Acknowledgments

I should like to thank several colleagues who read parts of this book and offered helpful advice: Alan Lawson of the University of Queensland, and Diana Brydon, Eva-Marie Kröller, and Laurie Ricou of the University of British Columbia. Many others willingly answered particular questions. Jon Nightingale and Victoria Lyon-Lamb provided guidance with computer programming; Lilita Rodman located some statistical data; Robin Bellamy helped find some of the illustrations, and along with Diane Thomson and numerous other people, helped verify authors' dates; Richard Ruggles, Michael Ames and Conrad Heidenreich answered questions about ethnographic and cartographic history. Doreen Todhunter, Debbi Onbirbak and Beverly Westbrook typed sections of the manuscript. To all of them, and to A. N. Jeffares and Beverley Tarquini, for their editorial suggestions, I am grateful.

My greatest debt is to Peggy, my wife, and our two sons, David and Peter. As always, they generously encouraged me. I want especially to thank Peggy for her constructive comments on the typescript, and for the twenty years of conversation that helped in no small way to shape this book.

The author and publisher also wish to express their appreciation to the following, for permission to quote from material in copyright: David Arnason, excerpt from The Circus Performers' Bar: Talonbooks; Margaret Atwood, excerpts from poems: the author; Margaret Avison, excerpts from poems from The Dumbfounding: the author; Earle Birney, excerpts from poems: the author; George Bowering, excerpt from Burning Water: the author; Morley Callaghan, excerpt from 'A Girl with Ambition': Don Congdon Associates Inc.; Emily Carr, from FRESH SEEING by Emily Carr © 1972 Clarke Irwin & Co. Editor's preface

The study of literature requires knowledge of contexts as well as of texts. What kind of person wrote the poem, the play, the novel, the essay? What forces acted upon them as they wrote? What was the historical, the political, the philosophical, the economic, the cultural background? Was the writer accepting or rejecting the literary conventions of the time, or developing them, or creating entirely new kinds of literary expression? Are there interactions between literature and the art, music or architecture of its period? Was the writer affected by contemporaries or isolated?

Such questions stress the need for students to go beyond the reading of set texts, to extend their knowledge by developing a sense of chronology, of action and reaction, and of the varying relationships between writers and society.

Histories of literature can encourage students to make comparisons, can aid in understanding the purposes of individual authors and in assessing the totality of their achievements. Their development can be better understood and appreciated with some knowledge of the background of their time. And histories of literature, apart from their valuable function as reference books, can demonstrate the great wealth of writing in English that there is to be enjoyed. They can guide the reader who wishes to explore it more fully and to gain in the process deeper insights into the rich diversity not only of literature but of human life itself.
