Acknowledgements

I wish to record my thanks to a small but valued group of friends and colleagues who helped bring some long-held ideas and arguments into focus and fruition in this book. Particular thanks are due to Jo Campling, who, as ever, gave me her time and wise counsel and supported my endeavours throughout. My thanks are also due to Stephen Kennedy and Victoria Yogman at Macmillan, who not only liked the outline of the book but encouraged its path to publication. Special thanks are due to Keith Povey for his skill and help in sharpening the text and to Ann Lowe who helped with typing and progress-chasing.

Above all, I must thank my wife, Rosalind Barnes, without whose support and encouragement this endeavour could never have succeeded.

MICHAEL MCCARTHY

Notes on the Contributors

Judith Allsop is a Principal Lecturer in Social Policy in the Social Sciences Department, South Bank Polytechnic. She has written a number of books and articles on health policy including Health Policy and the NHS and The Emperor's New Clothes: Family Practitioner Committees in the 1980s. She is currently a member of a District, and a Special, Health Authority in London and is researching user grievances and medical regulation.

Miriam David is Head of the Department of Social Sciences at South Bank Polytechnic. Her research interests are in educational policy and family policy. She has published widely in these areas, in both Britain and North America. Her key publications are The State, the Family and Education and For the Children's Sake: Making Child Care more than Women's Business (with Caroline New). She is currently doing research on an evaluation of the implementation of the Education Reform Act, 1988, particularly on the changing role of parents in educational decision-making. She is also writing a book on the relations between families and schools.

Martin Knapp is Deputy Director of the Personal Social Services Research Unit and Reader in the Economics of Social Policy, University of Kent at Canterbury. His current work includes evaluation of care in the community for former long-stay hospital residents, numerous studies of child welfare services and interventions for young offenders, and a study of the roles of the private and voluntary sectors in social and health care provision. He is author of The Economics of Social Care.

Ruth Lister is Professor of Applied Social Studies at the University of Bradford. From 1971 to 1987 she worked for the Child Poverty Action Group, from 1979 as Director. She has written and spoken extensively on the issues of poverty and income maintenance. Her publications include Supplementary Benefit Rights and Welfare Benefits. She received an honorary doctorate from the University of Manchester in 1987.

Michael McCarthy is Regional Director of Retirement Security Limited, a company specialising in the development of very sheltered private housing for elderly people. He was previously Assistant Secretary of the British Association of Social Workers and before that Head of Research of a major trade union. From 1975 to 1983 he lectured in British politics at Trent Polytechnic. He has written and contributed to a number of books and academic journals on politics and social policy and from 1985 to 1988 he wrote the social policy column of Social Work Today.

Molly Meacher is the Director of Action Trust and Campaign for Work and company secretary for Workforce Publications, publishers of the Signing On newspaper for unemployed people. She is also a Mental Health Act Commissioner and Council member of the Family Policy Studies Centre. She has served on the Executive Committee of the Child Poverty Action Group and is the author of Scrutiny in the Welfare, co-author of To Him Who Hath, and editor of New Methods of Mental Health Care.

Rod Morgan is Senior Lecturer in Criminology and Director of the Centre for Criminal Justice, University of Bath. He is currently doing research on the Implementation of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, and on lay visitors to police stations. His books include The Future of the Prison System, Prisons and Accountability and Coming to Terms with Policing.

Nick Raynsford was member of Parliament for Fulham, 1986–7. He is best known for his work and expertise in the housing field. Before becoming an MP he was Director of SHAC for ten years and played a leading role in the campaign for legislation to extend homeless people's rights. Since the 1987 General Election he has been working as a housing consultant.

Alan Walker is Professor of Social Policy and Chairperson of the Department of Sociological Studies, University of Sheffield. He has written extensively on the subject of community care, social policy, social gerontology and disability. He is editor of Community Care, Ageing and Social Policy, and author of Social Policy and The Caring Relationship (with Hazel Qureshi).
