MY THANKS are due to Alcuin Blamires and Allen Samuels for exchanging ideas about this series; also to Belinda Humfrey and Malcolm Smith, as Chairs of Victorian Studies at SDUC, for opportunities to deliver early fragments of this text to tolerant audiences at Lampeter and Gregynog. In that context I am also grateful to Philip Collins for his comments. To Michael Scott and Macmillan's editors I owe thanks for their elastic professional patience. To Kathy, whose home has been haunted by the ghosts of Cathy and Catherine for quite long enough, I owe thanks for advice, encouragement, and a great deal more.

General Editor's Preface

OVER THE last few years the practice of literary criticism has become hotly debated. Methods developed earlier in the century and before have been attacked and the word 'crisis' has been drawn upon to describe the present condition of English Studies. That such a debate is taking place is a sign of the subject discipline's health. Some would hold that the situation necessitates a radical alternative approach which naturally implies a 'crisis situation'. Others would respond that to employ such terms is to precipitate or construct a false position. The debate continues but it is not the first. 'New Criticism' acquired its title because it attempted something fresh calling into question certain practices of the past. Yet the practices it attacked were not entirely lost or negated by the new critics. One factor becomes clear: English Studies is a pluralistic discipline.

What are students coming to advanced work in English for the first time to make of all this debate and controversy? They are in danger of being overwhelmed by the cross-currents of critical approaches as they take up their study of literature. The purpose of this series is to help delineate various critical approaches to specific literary texts. Its authors are from a variety of critical schools and have approached their task in a flexible manner. Their aim is to help the reader come to terms with the variety of criticism and to introduce him or her to further reading on the subject and to a fuller evaluation of a particular text by illustrating the way it has been approached in a number of contexts. In the first part of the book a critical survey is given of some of the major ways the text has been appraised. This is done sometimes in a thematic manner, sometimes according to various 'schools' or 'approaches'. In the second part the authors provide their own appraisals of the text from their stated critical standpoint, allowing the reader the knowledge of their own particular approaches from which their views may in turn be evaluated. The series therein hopes to introduce and to elucidate criticism of authors and texts being studied and to encourage participation as the critics debate.

A Note on Text and References

PAGE NUMBERS in round brackets refer to the World's Classics edition of Wuthering Heights, edited by Ian Jack (Oxford and New York, 1981), which reprints the authoritative Clarendon text of the novel.

Bibliographical details of critical studies mentioned in the text are listed in the References section.

Where more than one study by a particular author has been cited, references in the text differentiate between them by date of publication (and by 'a' or 'b' to differentiate within particular years). Page numbers in square brackets refer to the study immediately under discussion.
