Preface

This book has been a long time in the making. It derives essentially from ten years' experience of teaching courses on the BA in Organization Studies at Bradford and Ilkley Community College. My first debt, then, is to all the students at Bradford who have had to listen and struggle to understand the early formulation of these ideas. My period at Bradford has also been noteworthy for the opportunity to work with people from a wide variety of disciplinary backgrounds. In particular, I would like to thank the following for their friendship and intellectual support over many years: David Hooper, Tom Johnston, Albert Mills and Liz Shorrocks.

This book would probably still not be finished if I had not been granted a year's study leave by the Governors of Bradford and Ilkley College in 1987–8, and for that reason I owe them a debt of gratitude. In relation to this, I would like to thank Professor David Hickson of the Management Centre at the University of Bradford who helped me get study leave by arranging for me to be a Visiting Fellow at the Management Centre during this period.

David Dunkerley in his role both as External Examiner for the BA in Organization Studies and as reader of this book has been a continuous source of help and encouragement.

Finally, my thanks go to Susan, Ryan, Spencer and Kate for all they have endured over the time of writing this book.
