ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to thank all the undergraduates who have sat my course on British political history over the years, for the important feedback they provided while I sorted out my ideas. The staffs of the National Library of Wales, Aberystwyth and St David's University College, Lampeter, have always been courteous and helpful, even when the book I asked them to find for me was staring me in the face.

Martin Polley and Martin Wright deserve special thanks for reading the text in full and for making many useful comments and suggestions. Needless to say, what faults remain in the book are mine, not theirs.
