Since this book results from my experience not only as a reader, but as a teacher of Ulysses, my greatest debt is to my students at Cornell where I have been teaching Ulysses regularly for the past eighteen years.

My Cornell colleagues, especially Phillip Marcus, have been generous and helpful in dialogues about Ulysses, but I want also to acknowledge the ubiquitous influence on my work of M. H. Abrams, and the friendship and collegiality of Tom Hill and Michael Colacurcio.

As my student and my graduate assistant in two summer session courses on Ulysses, Beth Newman has provided stimulating and challenging conversation on Ulysses. I have also learned from the work of my graduate student William Thickstun. For more than twenty years, since I was his student at Edinburgh in 1961–2, I have had the benefit of Ian Gregor's advice and friendship. I am grateful to the participants in my 1985 National Endowment for the Humanities Summer Seminar for high-school teachers for helping clarify some points in my argument. I appreciate the splendid and loyal secretarial support of Phillis Molock, the proofreading assistance of Diane McPherson and Mary Ann Naples, and the encouragement of my wife and sons.

I would like to thank Random House and The Bodley Head for permission to quote from James Joyce's Ulysses, and for the Society of Authors for permission to reprint Joyce's schema as it appeared in C. H. Peake's James Joyce: the Citizen and Artist (Stanford University Press, 1977).
