Acknowledgements

Many people have provided assistance, support and inspiration during the process of the writing of this book. There are too many for it to be practical to thank them all individually. Nonetheless there are some who have made a very direct contribution to the project and I am keen to acknowledge this contribution and express my thanks.

My greatest debt is to Professor Janet Finch, who proposed the writing of this book on a visit to Australia in 1987. Later, during the research phase, she not only provided advice but also the hospitality of her department and her home in Lancaster. She has been unstinting in her assistance.

People in a number of countries helped me as I moved around collecting data and informed opinions. Others acted as researchers at various stages of the project. Still others have undertaken, with admirable good humour, the tedious task of reading drafts. I have been provided with much helpful and insightful comment. In these varying capacities I am indebted too: Sabina Berloge, Julia Brannen, Drude Dahlerup, Anne Edwards, Annette Felahey, Ian Gough, Dulcie Groves, Beatrice Halsaa, Barbara Hobson, Donald Horne, Cathie Jensen-Lee, Wuokko Knocke, Arnlaug Leira, Inge Maerkedahl, Frauke Meyer-Gosau, David Morgan, Martin Mowbray, Ron Parsler, Kathy Ruane, Diane Sainsbury, Peter Taylor-Gooby, Steve Tomsen, Lorraine Wheeler and Anna Yeatman.

I want also to take the traditional opportunity to express my gratitude to my deceased parents for encouraging my interest in matters political, and to my children, Frances and Matthew, for their supportive attitudes over the years. Finally I want to take the opportunity to thank Geoff Sharp, the teacher who originally fired my interest in critical sociological analysis.
