Notes on contributors

Edward Benson is a solicitor with Browne Jacobson in Nottingham, where he is head of the Employment Department. He has a degree in mathematics from the University of Cambridge and, having qualified as a solicitor, first practised in the City of London. Edward then worked at Incomes Data Services as assistant editor of handbooks and supplements before moving on to Industrial Relations Services where he was editor of the Industrial Relations Legal Information Bulletin. He has written widely in the area of employment law, particularly in relation to redundancy and industrial conflict.

Mark Carley is editor of the European Industrial Relations Review, the monthly journal covering industrial relations developments across Western Europe and EC social policy. Having studied at the University of Leeds, the University of Manchester and Bolton Institute of Higher Education, he worked for British Rail and in further education before joining Industrial Relations Services in 1988. Formerly visiting lecturer in industrial relations at the Polytechnic of Central London, he has a particular interest in 'social dialogue' and European-level information and consultation initiatives.

Bernard Casey has been a senior research fellow at the Policy Studies Institute in London since 1986. He studied at the University of Oxford and the London School of Economics following which he worked for six years in the Labour Market Policy Research Unit of the Wissenschaftszentrum Berlin (Science Centre Berlin). Bernard has acted as consultant to the OECD and has carried out research for various UK government departments and the Commission of the EC. He has published books and articles on a range of subjects including non-standard forms of employment, older workers and retirement and the active labour market policies of various OECD countries.

Susan Cox joined Industrial Relations Services (IRS) in 1987. Since then she has worked as research officer and acting editor of the Industrial Relations Legal Information Bulletin (now the Industrial Relations Law Bulletin), specialising in discrimination law and the effect of the European Community on employment rights in the UK. Susan graduated in law from Trinity Hall, Cambridge, in 1980 and first worked as a solicitor in private practice and at a law centre. She has also been a visiting lecturer in employment law at the Polytechnic of Central London and the Polytechnic of North London, and is currently course adviser and tutor for the Certificate in Employment Law offered jointly by IRS and Middlesex University.

Peter Cressey currently lectures at the University of Bath in the area of sociology and industrial relations. He is the author of a number of books and reports on worker participation and European industrial relations. Peter was formerly the convenor of a research centre on participation at the University of Glasgow and in recent years he has worked for the ILO and with the European Foundation for the Improvement of Living and Working Conditions in Dublin as organiser for a series of international workshops on European employee involvement.

Michael Gold is a senior lecturer in organisation studies at the University of Westminster (formerly the Polytechnic of Central London). He is currently on part-time secondment to the National Institute of Economic and Social Research where he is carrying out research on the impact of European integration on UK labour markets. He worked formerly at Incomes Data Services and Industrial Relations Services, where he was editor of the European Industrial Relations Review. He has degrees from the Universities of Oxford and Edinburgh, and is also a Member of the Institute of Linguists.

Phil James has been a senior lecturer in human resource management at Middlesex University Business School since 1989. Prior to taking up his current post, he had lectured at the University of Birmingham and worked as a researcher and editor at Industrial Relations Services. Phil has researched and written extensively in the fields of industrial relations and occupational health and safety for both books and journals, and lectured in these fields on a wide variety of degree courses and management seminars. He is UK editor of the European Safety Newsletter and a member of the editorial advisory board of the Human Resource Management Journal.

Helen Rainbird is a senior research fellow in the Industrial Relations Research Unit at the University of Warwick, before which she was attached to the Institute of Employment Research, also at Warwick. Helen has degrees in social anthropology from the University of Durham and has specialised in industrial training. She is the author of Training Matters – Union Perspectives on Industrial Restructuring and Training (Blackwell, 1990) and co-editor, with Gerd Syben, of Restructuring a Traditional Industry – Construction, Employment and Skills in Europe (Berg, 1991). She is currently engaged on comparative research into training across Europe.

Philippa Watson is a barrister in private practice in Brussels, specialising in European Community law. She has degrees in law from Trinity College, Dublin, and the University of Cambridge, and is a member of both the Irish and English Bars. Philippa lectured at Queen Mary College, London, and later moved to the University of Leuven in Belgium. She then worked as a legal secretary at the European Court of Justice before taking up a post in DG IV, the Directorate-General within the Commission of the EC responsible for competition policy. She has written extensively on European social and labour affairs, with a particular interest in social security.
