In writing this book I have accumulated debts to a great number of people, to whom I wish to express my gratitude.

Stuart Corbridge introduced me to Alain Lipietz's work and gave me encouragement when I first envisaged a dissertation on 'regulation theory'. At Syracuse University the members of my committee, John Agnew, Naeem Inayatullah, John Nagle, Mark Rupert and Stuart Thorson demonstrated admirable patience in putting up with what must have seemed to be a never-ending stream of reports, memos, consultations and meetings; they have been unstinting in their support. Fred Frohock, former department chair, and Kristi Andersen, director of studies, encouraged me to apply for a Syracuse University Fellowship, which allowed me to concentrate on my research for two years (1988–1990). My colleagues Don Pratt and Jin-Young Kim read drafts of my proposal and several chapters, and were always willing to hear me out, no matter how far-fetched and implausible the ideas I raised. In addition to the University Fellowship, the Syracuse University Senate, the Graduate School and the Roscoe-Martin Fund of the Maxwell School provided me with grants which defrayed most of the expenses for my research trip to France (March–May 1990).

Alain Noël sent me the programme of the Barcelona Conference on Regulation Theory. This enabled me to obtain copies of papers presented at the conference from individual participants, whose names are listed in the bibliography.

I incurred further debts in the course of my research trip to France. In Grenoble, Professor Rolande Borrelly arranged my accommodation, patiently answered my questions, asked me questions which obliged me to clarify my own project, organised an extremely stimulating meeting with the GRREC's PhD candidates, and honoured me with a request to make a brief presentation at a meeting of the GRREC; this last was followed by a discussion which was also very helpful. Professor Gérard Destanne de Bernis willingly granted me an interview at very short notice and explained to me the finer points of Grenoble regulation theory.

In Paris, Professor Michel Aglietta acceded to my request for an interview in spite of his busy schedule. Mr Robert Boyer provided me with a substantial number of unpublished documents, suggested bibliographical references, and urged me to meet with Professor Aglietta and Dr Bruno Théret. Dr Robert Delorme encouraged me to persevere in my research. Mr Alain Lipietz gave generously of his time, notwithstanding his other responsibilities. Professor Jacques Mistral took time out from his busy schedule as advisor to the prime minister to receive me at his office. Dr Bruno Théret agreed to an interview upon Mr Boyer's recommendation, and patiently explained to me the theoretical framework of his dissertation.

At Wellesley College, Craig Murphy gave me moral support as I was revising my manuscript.

The following friends in the United States and France assisted me in many ways: Linda Alcott, Hubert Boulos, Bhavna Dave, Ludwick Faust, Isabelle Lafont, Marcel Kitissou, Sandra Koff, Eric Lund, Nancy Morrell, Will and Marie Provine, Devi Ramakrishnan, André Roux, Marc and Offie Téqui and Ron Witzke.

Tim Shaw has been an enthusiastic editor throughout. It is a great honour to have my book included in the series published under his tireless direction. Clare Andrews has been unstinting in her efforts on my behalf. Last, but not least, Keith Povey's meticulous and skilful editing has polished the typescript and made it a more readable book.

It goes without saying that all errors and omissions remain my responsibility.
