This series of new textbooks covers the areas of human resource management, employee relations, organisational behaviour and related business and management fields. Each text has been specially commissioned to be written by leading experts in a clear and accessible way. An important feature of the series is the international orientation. The titles will contain serious and challenging material, be analytical rather than prescriptive and be particularly suitable for use by students with no prior specialist knowledge.

The series will be relevant for a number of business and management courses, including MBA and post-experience courses, specialist masters and postgraduate diplomas, professional courses and final-year undergraduate and related courses. The books will become essential reading at business and management schools worldwide.

Acknowledgements

This book has benefited from the contributions, encouragement and advice of many people. I would especially like to thank Gibson Burrell, Mick Marchington and Paul Thompson for their support and encouragement; Judith Clegg for her brief yet highly productive research assistance; Keith Povey for his swift and helpful copy-editing; Stephen Rutt and Jane Powell at Macmillan for their forbearance; and Neil Anderson, Margaret and David Collinson, Louise Fitzgerald, Yasmin Frings, Les Prince, Brendan McSweeney, and Dave Wilson for their invaluable contributions to this collection of case studies.

In addition, I would like to express my thanks to Itzhak Harpaz and the British Psychological Society for permission to reproduce Table 2.1 on page 12, as well as to Howard Rosenbrock and Springer-Verlag Publishing for permission to reprint the debate featured in case 47, pages 219–28.

Finally, I should like to thank (and congratulate) the creator of the splendid cartoon reproduced, somewhat crudely, on page 232. Despite extensive inquiries I have been unable to ascertain the identity of the artist or the magazine in which the original cartoon was published. Should anyone be able to enlighten me on this matter could they please get in touch so that due acknowledgment can be made.
