Acknowledgements

I am grateful to the following libraries for permission to refer to and quote from Barrett Browning's manuscripts: the Armstrong Browning Library, Baylor University, Waco, Texas; the British Library; the English Poetry Collection, Wellesley College Library; the Henry W. and Albert A. Berg Collection, the New York Public Library, Astor, Lenox and Tilden Foundations; the James Marshall and Marie Louise Osborn Collection, Yale University Library; and the Pierpont Morgan Library. I would like to thank the librarians in these libraries for their assistance. I owe a special debt of gratitude to Betty Coley of the Armstrong Browning Library and Scott Lewis of The Brownings' Correspondence for sharing their expertise regarding the Brownings, as well as to the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada for a grant supporting my research on Barrett Browning's manuscripts. A longer version of Chapter 3 appeared in Victorian Literature and Culture, 21 (1993). I would like to thank the editors for permission to reprint it.

My editor, Adele King, and my colleagues at Dalhousie and elsewhere gave me many helpful suggestions. I would particularly like to thank Malcolm Ross, who read all of the manuscript, for his astute comments on structure; Cory Davies and Mary Arseneau for stimulating conversations and for reading several chapters with a rigorous editorial eye; and my colleague and husband, Andy Wainwright, for helping me find a point of entry into the myths surrounding Barrett Browning (and out of them again). Mervyn Nicholson and Ronald Tetreault helped me to see some of the many weaknesses in an early version of the chapter on 'Romantic Revisionism'. Patricia Monk generously shared her computer expertise and Julia Swan meticulously proof-read the manuscript.

Most of all, I am indebted to Andy and our children for enduring life with someone possessed by 'EBB'.

Editors' Preface

The study of women's writing has been long neglected by a male critical establishment both in academic circles and beyond. As a result, many women writers have either been unfairly neglected or have been marginalised in some way, so that their true influence and importance has been ignored. Other women writers have been accepted by male critics and academics, but on terms which seem, to many women readers of this generation, to be false or simplistic. In the past the internal conflicts involved in being a woman in a male-dominated society have been largely ignored by readers of both sexes, and this has affected our reading of women's work. The time has come for a serious reassessment of women's writing in the light of what we understand today.

This series is designed to help in that reassessment.

All the books are written by women because we believe that men's understanding of feminist critique is only, at best, partial. And besides, men have held the floor quite long enough.
