My interest in attachment theory and the nature of social relationships in human affairs has been steadily nurtured over the years by my friend and colleague, Diana Hinings. I have lost count of the number of conversations we have had about people and cases, theory and practice, reason and emotion. Her influence pervades every page of the book and I owe her a considerable debt of gratitude. I should also like to take this opportunity to thank Jo Campling. Without her timely prompting and continued encouragement, this particular book would not have been written.
