General Editor's Preface

Transitions: transition-em, n. of action. 1. A passing or passage from one condition, action or (rarely) place, to another. 2. Passage in thought, speech, or writing, from one subject to another. 3. a. The passing from one note to another b. The passing from one key to another, modulation. 4. The passage from an earlier to a later stage of development or formation ... change from an earlier style to a later; a style of intermediate or mixed character ... the historical passage of language from one well-defined stage to another.

The aim of Transitions is to explore passages and movements in critical thought, and in the development of literary and cultural interpretation. This series also seeks to examine the possibilities for reading, analysis and other critical engagements which the very idea of transition makes possible. The writers in this series unfold the movements and modulations of critical thinking over the last generation, from the first emergences of what is now recognized as literary theory. They examine as well how the transitional nature of theoretical and critical thinking is still very much in operation, guaranteed by the hybridity and heterogeneity of the field of literary studies. The authors in the series share the common understanding that, now more than ever, critical thought is both in a state of transition and can best be defined by developing for the student reader an understanding of this protean quality.

This series desires, then, to enable the reader to transform her/his own reading and writing transactions by comprehending past developments. Each book in the series offers a guide to the poetics and politics of interpretative paradigms, schools and bodies of thought, while transforming these, if not into tools or methodologies, then into conduits for directing and channelling thought. As well as transforming the critical past by interpreting it from the perspective of the present day, each study enacts transitional readings of a number of well-known literary texts, all of which are themselves conceivable as having been transitional texts at the moments of their first appearance. The readings offered in these books seek, through close critical reading and theoretical engagement, to demonstrate certain possibilities in critical thinking to the student reader.

It is hoped that the student will find this series liberating because rigid methodologies are not being put into place. As all the dictionary definitions of the idea of transition above suggest, what is important is the action, the passage: of thought, of analysis, of critical response. Rather than seeking to help you locate yourself in relation to any particular school or discipline, this series aims to put you into action, as readers and writers, travellers between positions, where the movement between poles comes to be seen as of more importance than the locations themselves.

Acknowledgements

It is a thankless task thanking people, because the formula, whatever it may be, is inevitably never quite right. Too much effusion, too little gratitude and, all too often and unfortunately, just the right amount of apparent protocol which ends up coming off as insincerity. But despite all these worries, in the words of Jane Austen's Miss Bates, 'It's such a happiness when good friends get together, and they always do' – at least on acknowledgements pages such as this.

First and always, Jim Kincaid, who is always there somewhere, ready to throw a pie in the faces of those who deserve it. Peggy Kamuf helped me begin to come to terms with Derrida, generously, patiently, without hesitation, and I thank her. John Brannigan, Claire Jones, Ruth Robbins, Moyra Haslett, Jane Goldman, Mark Currie, John Abercrombie, Marion Wynne-Davies, Geoff Ward, Jane Stabler, Andrew Roberts, Alison Chapman: all have directly or indirectly influenced whatever is good about this book, as have the rest of my colleagues at Dundee; all have contributed in some manner. Ruth particularly gave me a number of the ideas which helped shaped the chapter on Paul Valéry, as well as inviting me to a conference on the short story at the University of Luton, where I rehearsed some of the material. Also having made contributions – more than I can tell them – are the undergraduates who took part in my Literary Theory tutorials in 1995–96, and students who attended Gender, Sexuality and Feminism and James Joyce seminars and tutorials (1996–97), as well as David Hearn, Malcolm Mann, Brian Niro, Meike Prescher and Leah Wain.

I would also like to thank Nicholas Royle and Martin McQuillan for inviting me to give papers to their Literary Theory graduate seminars, at the Universities of Stirling and Glasgow respectively, where versions of chapters were first tried out. Vassiliki Kolokotroni really knew which questions to ask, and I thank her for that. On another occasion, Stella Swain asked equally pertinent questions concerning a version of the chapter on Iain Sinclair, while Roger Ebbatson also contributed in a most positive and kindly fashion: thank you.

I would finally like to thank Margaret Bartley at Macmillan for having faith in the idea of a series in the first place, and whose untiring efforts and good humour are without equal.
