Acknowledgements

Many of the ideas and approaches covered in this book were suggested to me during my time as a part-time lecturer in the History and Theory of Art and Design at Leeds Polytechnic (now Leeds Metropolitan University) between 1984 and 1990. My colleagues at that time included Jonathan Harris, Ian Heywood, Wendy Leeks, Richard Tyler and Anita Whittle. I am sure that they will recognise what I learned from them.

Many of these ideas and approaches have been refined and developed during my time at the University of Derby. My colleagues here have included Alan Barnes, Robert Burstow, Gail Day, Steve Edwards, David Heathcote, Stanley Mitchell, Giles Peaker, Josie Walter, Julia Welbourne and Rhiannon Williams. I am grateful to them all, and to my friend Chris Jenks, of Goldsmiths' College, University of London, for a great deal of help and many useful suggestions.

Catherine Gray, the commissioning editor, Houri Alavi, the assistant editor, and Nancy Williams have been of enormous help at Macmillan, as has the anonymous adviser whose maturity and rigour tightened up the work considerably. I am also grateful to Simon Birkett and Sally Edwards at the University of Derby for producing prints suitable for reproduction here from some often unpromising originals.

Finally, acknowledgements must be made to the Research Centre for Cultural History and Critical Theory, in the School of Art and Design at the University of Derby, which enabled me to take some time out from teaching in order to write.
