ISSUES IN POLITICAL THEORY

Political Theory has undergone a remarkable development in recent years. From a state in which it was once declared dead, it has come to occupy a central place in the study of Politics. Both political ideas and the wide-ranging arguments to which they give rise are now treated in a rigorous, analytical fashion, and political theorists have contributed to disciplines as diverse as economics, sociology and law. These developments have made the subject more challenging and exciting, but they have also added to the difficulties of students and others coming to the subject for the first time. Much of the burgeoning literature in specialist books and journals is readily intelligible only to those who are already well-versed in the subject.

Issues in Political Theory is a series conceived in response to this situation. It consists of a number of detailed and comprehensive studies of issues central to Political Theory which take account of the latest developments in scholarly debate. While making original contributions to the subject, books in the series are written especially for those who are new to Political Theory. Each volume aims to introduce its readers to the intricacies of a fundamental political issue and to help them find their way through the detailed, and often complicated, argument that that issue has attracted.

PETER JONES
ALBERT WEALE

ISSUES IN POLITICAL THEORY

Series Editors: PETER JONES and ALBERT WEALE

Published

David Beetham: The Legitimation of Power

Tom Campbell: Justice

John Horton: Political Obligation

Peter Jones: Rights

Albert Weale: Democracy

Forthcoming

Bhikhu Parekh: The Politics of Multiculturalism

Hillel Steiner: Utilitarianism

Democracy

Albert Weale

© Albert Weale 1999

All rights reserved. No reproduction, copy or transmission of this publication may be made without written permission.

No paragraph of this publication may be reproduced, copied or transmitted save with written permission or in accordance with the provisions of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988, or under the terms of any licence permitting limited copying issued by the Copyright Licensing Agency, 90 Tottenham Court Road, London W1P 9HE.

Any person who does any unauthorized act in relation to this publication may be liable to criminal prosecution and civil claims for damages.

The author has asserted his rights to be identified as the author of this work in accordance with the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988.

First published 1999 by

MACMILLAN PRESS LTD

Houndmills, Basingstoke, Hampshire RG21 6XS and London

Companies and representatives throughout the world

ISBN 978-0-333-56755-5 ISBN 978-1-349-27291-4 (eBook)

DOI 10.1007/978-1-349-27291-4

A catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library.

This book is printed on paper suitable for recycling and made from fully managed and sustained forest sources.

10	9	8	7	6	5	4	3	2	1
08	07	06	05	04	03	02	01	00	99

Typeset by EXPO Holdings, Malaysia

Published in the United States of America 1999 by

ST. MARTIN'S PRESS, INC.,

Scholarly and Reference Division,

175 Fifth Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10010

ISBN 978-0-312-22092-1 PBK

ISBN 978-0-312-22091-4 HC

Contents

Acknowledgements	vii
1 Introduction: Democracy and Political Theory	1
Political principles and political theory	5
The circumstances of politics	8
The definition of democracy	13
2 Varieties of Democracy	19
A typology of democratic forms	24
Choosing forms of government	36
3 The Justification of Democracy	40
The protective case for democracy	43
Democracy versus adjudication	47
Democracy and political equality	54
Common interests and common ideals	59
4 Autonomy, Virtue and Consent	62
Democracy and autonomy	64
Democracy and deliberative autonomy	68
Democracy and virtue	74
Democracy and consent	78
5 Participation and Representation	84
Participation and feasibility	85
Participation versus representation?	90
From representation to constitutional democracy?	98
Choosing among systems	104
6 Forms of Representation	106
Representing interests, opinions or characteristics?	108

Back to social characteristics?	116
Conclusions	122
7 Unanimity, Consensus and Majority Rule	124
The principle of unanimity	126
The properties of majority rule	129
Condorcet cycles and the paradox of voting	137
Voting cycles and institutional rationality	143
Conclusions	146
8 Inclusion	148
The problem of qualification	151
The problem of partitioning	159
Extension beyond persons?	164
9 Democracy and Constitutionalism	167
Democracy and constitutionalism	170
Democracy and political rights	175
Democracy and civil rights	178
Democracy and property rights	183
Democracy and independent authority	185
Conclusions	187
10 The Obligations of Democracy	189
Political obligations in a democracy	191
Being outvoted	195
Obligations and political community	200
Is there an obligation to bring about democracy?	206
11 An Ideal of Democracy?	211
Guide to Further Reading	219
Bibliography	222
Index	232

Acknowledgements

I have acquired many debts in writing this book. Peter Jones, co-editor of this series and a long-standing friend, has helped me over many years. He has been unstinting with advice, constructive in criticism and supportive throughout. My publisher, Steven Kennedy, has been patient above and beyond the call of duty. There must have been many occasions on which he will have thought that, in the race between Achilles and the tortoise, Achilles would never catch up. I thank him for his understanding.

I do not follow the current fashion in thinking that teaching and research are incompatible activities. Indeed, not only do I find I learn much myself from trying to put my thoughts into order, but I am constantly intrigued by the insights that students bring to the logic of democratic theory. In recent years at the University of Essex I have taught much of this material to my graduate students in my course 'Political Principles and Public Policy' as well as lecturing on democratic theory to first-year students in the 'Introduction to Politics' course. I have always enjoyed the experience, and I hope the same can be said for those who have taken the courses.

I have also given various papers related to this work at different universities, including Cambridge, City University Hong Kong, East Anglia, Essex and the London School of Economics. I am grateful to the participants on all occasions for the constructive discussions I have had.

I have learnt many things from conversations and discussions with colleagues at Essex, especially Michael Freeman, Tony King and Hugh Ward. In addition, a number of people have kindly read, sometimes in great detail, all or part of the draft manuscript. They include: David Beetham, Ian Budge, David Held, Ron Johnston, Geraint Parry and John Street, as well as an anonymous publisher's reviewer. Their comments were always pertinent and acute, and I hope they see some signs of their influence in this version. I am particularly grateful to those where I have ventured, and sometimes even persisted, in disagreeing with their views.

One person who read the draft manuscript was the late Martin Hollis, who offered comments that were typically astute. Although I had been familiar with his work for many years, I came to know him personally when I worked at the University of East Anglia. He combined philosophical rigour with a wide understanding of the social sciences and a deep commitment to the values of a critical, academically independent educational system. He will be deeply missed by many.

Throughout the period of writing Jan Harris has been a constant companion, but the writing itself has all too often intruded upon time that we should have had together. That is why I only give two cheers for democracy.

ALBERT WEALE