Acknowledgements

We are both once again indebted to the indefatigable Ros Kirk – Senior Administrator in the Centre for Social Work at the University of Nottingham – who has prepared the manuscript for Macmillan. Her help, advice and unfailing good humour is much appreciated.

At a time when the barbarians appear to have taken up permanent residence in some of our higher education institutions, most distressingly in what used to be thought of as positions of senior academic leadership, we would like to take this opportunity to thank the Nottingham ‘Martyrs of 1997’ for their collegiality, decency and intellectual commitment over the years. The denigration of scholarship and the contempt shown for good teaching in some of our self-styled ‘research-led universities’ mean that we are unlikely to see the like of them again, to the great impoverishment of our once great seats of learning.

Finally, we are extremely grateful to our editor Catherine Gray at Macmillan, who has been so supportive of this collection from inception to publication.
