ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Few books are written without the support and assistance of others in what amounts to a mutual-aid network. In the first place, Michael Rose set me out on my initial researches on the Poor Law over twenty years ago and gave wise counsel during the supervision of two research degrees and beyond. Also, I have benefited from many discussions over the years with Stephen Davies, with whom I do not always agree but from whom I have learned much. Equally, a decade and more of undergraduate and research students at Manchester Metropolitan University have contributed to my knowledge of poverty and welfare, particularly those who asked awkward questions. The particular shape taken by this book crystallised in the stimulating environment of the Anstey conference organised by Hugh Cunningham at the University of Kent at Canterbury in January 1997. I would like to thank Joanna Innes and Steve King for allowing me to see copies of papers prior to publication. Additionally, I want to show my appreciation to Terry Wyke and Peter Shapely for their very helpful comments on an earlier draft and to acknowledge that the errors which remain are entirely my own responsibility. Finally, the greatest support of all has come from my family, especially Elaine whose sound advice and loving patience has been indispensable. In the interests of reciprocity it is her turn now.
