Patrick Dunleavy is Professor of Government at the London School of Economics. Educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and Nuffield College, Oxford, he worked at the Open University before moving to the LSE in 1979. He is a long-time editor of the Developments in British Politics series, and has published Democracy, Bureaucracy and Public Choice (1991) and many other books and papers.

Andrew Gamble is Professor of Politics and Director of the Political Economy Research Centre at the University of Sheffield. Recent publications include Hayek: The Iron Cage of Liberty, and journal articles on economic governance, the politics of ownership and comparative political economy.

Ian Holliday is Professor of Policy Studies at the City University of Hong Kong. Recent publications include The British Cabinet System (co-authored) and journal articles on British politics and policy. He co-edits the journal Party Politics.

Nevil Johnson was from 1969 to 1996 Nuffield Reader in the Comparative Study of Institutions in the University of Oxford and a Professional Fellow of Nuffield College where he is now an Emeritus Fellow. He has written extensively on British and German political institutions, and has a special interest in constitutionalism and the theory of institutions. His books include In Search of the Constitution (1977) and The Limits of Political Science (1989).

Michael Kenny is Lecturer in Politics at the University of Sheffield. Recent publications include The First New Left: British Intellectuals after Stalin and Rethinking British Decline (co-edited). He is the author of journal articles on British political thought, ethics and cultural policy, and the insights offered by modern political thought into contemporary international society.

Elizabeth Meehan is Professor of Politics at the Queen's University of Belfast. Recent publications deal with citizenship and the EU, devolution in the UK and British-Irish relations. Examples are 'European Integration and Citizens' Rights: A Comparative Perspective', Publius: The Journal of Federalism (1996); 'Citizenship and Social Inclusion', in M. Roche (ed.) European Citizenship and Social Exclusion

(1997); 'The Belfast Agreement: Distinctiveness and Cross-Fertilization in the UK's Devolution Programme', Parliamentary Affairs (1999).

Michael Moran is Professor of Government in the University of Manchester. He is co-author of the best-selling textbook Politics UK, and researches on comparative public policy. His most recent book is Governing the Health Care State.

Geraint Parry is the W. J. M. Mackenzie Professor of Government at the University of Manchester. Recent publications include Political Participation and Democracy in Britain (co-authored) and Democracy and Democratization (co-edited), and journal articles on political theory and political education. He is editor of the journal Government and Opposition.

Gillian Peele is Fellow and Tutor in Politics at Lady Margaret Hall, Oxford. She is the author of Governing the UK (1995) and a co-editor of Developments in British Politics 5 (1997) and of Developments in American Politics 3 (1998).

John Peterson is Jean Monnet Professor of European Politics at the University of Glasgow. Recent publications include Decision-Making in the European Union (co-authored), A Common Foreign Policy for Europe? (co-edited) and Technology Policy in the European Union (co-authored).

Robert Reiner is Professor of Criminology in the Law Department, London School of Economics. Among his recent books are Chief Constables (1991), The Politics of the Police (2nd edn, 1992) and Policing (1996). He was President of the British Society of Criminology from 1993 to 1996. His present research is an ESRC-funded study of changing media representations of crime and criminal justice in Britain since the Second World War.

Martin J. Smith is Professor of Politics at the University of Sheffield. He has published widely on British politics and comparative public policy. His recent publications include The Core Executive in Britain and Quangos, Accountability and Reform (co-edited).

Robert Thomas is Lecturer in Law at the University of Manchester. He has recently obtained his doctorate on the relationship between English and European Community administrative law, and is currently turning this study into a book.
