ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The completion of this book has been a long haul over several years during which many people and organizations have helped me along the way. As I cannot mention them all by name my first duty is to say thank you to everyone who has helped with this project. Second, I would like to thank my oral contributors, including the use I made of the Oral History Archive, Southampton City Council. Third, I owe thanks to the staff of the Department of Documents, Imperial War Museum, London, and the research division of Brixton Library for their co-operation. My grateful thanks also to all those who gave permission for me to quote from unpublished papers. Every possible effort has been made to trace copyright holders. Where this has not been successful, I would be very happy to include them in future editions of the book. I have made extensive use of the inter-library loan service at the Frewen Library, University of Portsmouth, and I would like to thank them for their very efficient service. Also thanks to the Equal Opportunities Commission for their prompt response to all my enquiries. Elizabeth Crawford and Jane Bell, specialist secondhand booksellers, have also sent me regular supplies from their excellent catalogues. Other people have helped in different ways. Jeannie Sharpe suggested the title for Chapter 2. Helena Cole guided me to the political statistics in Chapter 6. Students of my courses on 'Feminism' and 'Women, War and Social Change' at Portsmouth also provided me with stimulating insights. I owe particular thanks to Ligia Kasanin, Den Barry, Jacqueline Smith, Tracey Legge James and Jonathan Hamill. All my colleagues in the School of Social and Historical Studies have been very supportive during this period. I have also profited from a sabbatical semester from Portsmouth for which I am extremely grateful. I have been working in the area of 'feminist history' since the late 1970s. During this time I have benefited, along with hundreds of others, from the help and support of Anna Davin, whose unstinting encouragement of feminist history has been a great inspiration. Thanks Anna, from all of us. I would also like to take this opportunity to say a public thank you to Jane Lewis and Jeffrey Weeks for their path-breaking work.

I must also acknowledge some more personal debts. The love, support and encouragement of my parents, Vi Bruley and the late Joe Bruley, have been one of the great features of my life. I could have achieved nothing without them and to them I dedicate this book. I am also grateful to all my friends who have listened patiently to my moans and groans about the book over the years and who have given me valuable advice and support, especially Brenda Kirsch, Siri Lowe, Martin Durham, Jane Garratt, Mari Reynolds, Jane Elliot, Sue Laurence, Marie MacNay and John Shiers. Jane Gardner has provided childcare and other domestic back-up for the last seven years. Words cannot fully express what I owe to her. My final thank you is to Barry Edwards for sorting out so many of my technical problems. Without him this book would not have seen the light of day. The very last word of all is for my children who have too often been told, 'Don't ask me to do it – I'm trying to write a book!' Now that the book is written and it's time to let go, it's actually quite hard to do it, but when I think about Eric, Charlotte and Rowan I know that everything has its place.
