

ETHICAL CHOICES

Apart from human choices, genocide would not exist and there would have been no Holocaust. Where human self-understanding is concerned, arguably nothing is more important than knowing – and acting upon – the difference between choices that are ethical and those that are not. Drawing on history and philosophy, politics, culture and religion, the articles in this section help us, in the words of the philosopher Leonard Grob, to ‘rethink the relationship between morality and power’.

Articles on related themes will also be found in the next section, on Rescue.

The Mask of Administrative Evil: Remembering the Past, Forgetting the Present

Guy B. Adams and Danny L. Balfour

19

Gemilat Chesed and Moral Behaviour at Westerbork:
Lessons from the Past to Remember for the Future

Ellen Ben-Sefer

36

Humanitarian Concern versus Zyklon B

Florent Brayard

54

Tikkun Olam and Christian Ethics after the Holocaust

Robert Everett

66

Ethics without Choice: Lessons Learned from Rescuers and Perpetrators

Darrell J. Fasching

81

Conscience, conscience, consciousness: Emmanuel Levinas, the Holocaust, and the Logic of Witness

Sandor Goodhart

98

Post-Holocaust Ethics: The Morality of the Use of Power

Leonard Grob

114

Reflections on ‘Ethics’, ‘Morality’ and ‘Responsibility’ after the Holocaust

Herbert Hirsch

123

Ethics, Human Genetics and the Holocaust

Hans-Peter Kröner

133

Human Responsibility: Contemporary Reflections in Light of Nazi Ideology

John T. Pawlikowski

146

German-Jewish Philosophers Facing the Shoah

Julius Simon

162

Christianity, the Other and the Holocaust

Michael R. Steele

180

The Shift Towards Death: A Comparison of the Nazi Euthanasia Programme and Contemporary Debates on Euthanasia and Physician-Assisted Suicide

Amy Zaro

198