

The Palgrave Macmillan Animal Ethics Series

Series editors: Andrew Linzey and Priscilla Cohn

In recent years, there has been a growing interest in the ethics of our treatment of animals. Philosophers have led the way, and now a range of other scholars have followed from historians to social scientists. From being a marginal issue, animals have become an emerging issue in ethics and in multidisciplinary inquiry. This series explores the challenges that Animal Ethics poses, both conceptually and practically, to traditional understandings of human-animal relations. Specifically, the Series will:

- provide a range of key introductory and advanced texts that map out ethical positions on animals;
- publish pioneering work written by new, as well as accomplished, scholars; and
- produce texts from a variety of disciplines that are multidisciplinary in character or have multidisciplinary relevance.

Most of the chapters in this book began life as papers presented in a four-day workshop on Animal Politics and Political Animals at the ECPR Joint Sessions of Workshops in Antwerp, Belgium, 10–15 April 2012. On behalf of all the contributors to this volume, we would first like to express our sincerest thanks to those participants whose papers we could not include in our selection, but without whose comments, observations, suggestions and encouragement the texts that we did select would not be half as good: Susan Boonman-Berson, Rob Garner, Margaretha Hanes, Paul Lucardie, Kasper Ossenblok, Patrick Stouthuysen, Catherine Zwetkoff.

In addition, we all drew inspiration from two not so usual contributions to an already exceptionally productive workshop. One was a truly memorable lecture by, and dinner with, Michel Vandenbosch, co-founder and president of GAIA, Belgium's best known NGO that advocates animal rights and animal welfare. Equally remarkable was the experience of being the subject of investigation of one of our own subjects of investigation: the Netherlands Party for the Animals (PvdD). During the second day of our workshop, we were joined by PvdD Senator Niko Koffeman and by Karen Soeters, director of the Pierson Foundation, the party's scientific bureau. That day's proceedings were filmed by Joost de Haas and included in his prize-winning documentary on the PvdD De Haas in de Marathon (The Hare in the Marathon), available at <http://www.dehaasindemarathon.nl/en/>.

Productive academic opportunities such as this one do not fall from the sky, nor are they created ex nihilo. We are fond to remember the hospitality of the City and University of Antwerp and the excellent work done by the local organizing committee from the Department of Political Science. We owe the deepest gratitude to the ECPR as a whole and the indefatigable staff of the Central Services in Colchester in particular – without whom the Joint Sessions would not exist and the academic world would have to do without the most productive, most animating, most enjoyable, most memorable and most exhausting of conferences. Thanks are also owed to the various chocolatiers and bartenders of Antwerp, who helped to sustain us all over the course of the workshop.

Books such as this one do not fall from the sky, either. This one would not exist if it were not for the extremely effective help and guidance offered by 'our' people at Palgrave Macmillan: Melanie Blair and Brendan George. We thank them not only for their assistance in the production process, but, more importantly, for their support of broad-ranging engagement with animal studies. Thanks also to Alix Pearce at the University of Sydney for her thorough (and spirited) copy editing. And a final appreciation must be noted. Co-authoring and co-editing can sometimes be a laborious or conflict-ridden process, yet we have had nothing of the sort – instead, from the beginnings of the idea of a workshop through to the completion of the edited manuscript, we have had an engaging, productive and humorous relationship. We've learned a lot and enjoyed doing it – academia doesn't get much better than that.

Notes on Contributors

Manuel Arias-Maldonado is Associate Professor of Political Science at the University of Málaga, Spain. Previously, he was a Fulbright Scholar at the University of Berkeley and a visiting researcher at the Rachel Carson Center in Munich. His research interests include environmental political theory and philosophy, liberalism and democracy and the socio-political implications of information technologies. He has published a number of articles and book chapters, as well as an international monograph Real Green: Sustainability after the End of Nature (2012). He is also a regular contributor to newspapers and journals in his home country, where he writes pieces of opinion and miscellaneous essays about topics ranging from cinema to literature and politics, and he maintains a blog on Revista de Libros.

Kurtis Boyer is a lecturer and doctoral candidate in the Department of Political Science at Lund University, Sweden. Kurtis studied international development as an undergraduate at the University of Saskatchewan, and received his graduate degree in Political Science from the University of Northern British Columbia. His doctoral research critically engages with the concept of empathy, and the role it has in informing our conception of, and relationship to, animals in politics. Kurtis co-teaches a course on critical animal studies, and his broader research interests include political psychology, emotion, political theory, wildlife management, pet-pharmacology and the politics of social inclusion and diversity.

Clemens Driessen is interested in the ways in which design can help us re-imagine human-animal relations in our technological culture. Working between the fields of geography and philosophy, he has experimented with forms of research and public interventions that unsettle existing practices and moral geographies – as in www.playingwithpigs.nl. He has deployed mixtures of science and technology studies, animal studies, philosophy of technology, multispecies ethnography and historiography to study topics related to farming and nature conservation such as high rise pig farms, in-vitro meat, the welfare of fish, the political ecology of rewilding and the history of attempts at back-breeding the wild cow. Driessen is currently a lecturer with the Cultural Geography chair group at Wageningen University, the Netherlands.

Chad Flanders is Assistant Professor of Law at Saint Louis University School of Law. Previously, he was a Fulbright lecturer at Nanjing University, China and a visiting professor of law at DePaul University School of Law. After law school, he clerked on the Alaska Supreme Court in Anchorage, Alaska and the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals in Salt Lake City, Utah. He has authored over 30 articles and reviews on topics as diverse as election law, law and religion, the philosophy of punishment and Adam Smith.

Simon Otjes is Researcher at the Documentation Centre Dutch Political Parties of Groningen University. He obtained his PhD in Political Science in 2012 on a dissertation about the influence of new parties on established parties. His research interests include new political parties and parliamentary behaviour. Previously he has published in the American Journal of Political Science, Party Politics, and Political Studies. He also works for the Headquarters of the Dutch Green Left party as an electoral researcher.

David Schlosberg is Professor of Environmental Politics in the Department of Government and International Relations at the University of Sydney, and co-Director of the Sydney Environment Institute. His work primarily focuses on environmental political thought, environmental and climate justice, and the theory and practice of environmental movements. Schlosberg has held visiting appointments at the London School of Economics, Australian National University and Princeton University. He is the author of Defining Environmental Justice (2007), co-editor of The Oxford Handbook of Climate Change and Society (2011), and co-author of Climate-Challenged Society (2013). Schlosberg's current research includes work on climate justice in adaptation strategies and policies, new environmental movements focused on the flows and materials of everyday life (in particular food and energy movements) and the normative challenges for environmental management in the Anthropocene.

Christie Smith is a graduate teaching assistant and doctoral candidate in the Department of Politics at the University of Exeter, UK. She studied History and German for her undergraduate degree at Jesus College, Oxford, and she did her Masters in International Relations at Oxford Brookes. Her doctoral thesis, 'Articulating Ecological Injustices of Nuclear Energy', intervenes in contemporary debates over nuclear energy in the context of climate change, emphasizing the importance of attending to and more clearly articulating ecological injustices, particularly in areas, such as science and technology, which are understood to be separate from and above 'politics'. She has been actively involved in UK green and anti-nuclear politics, including Climate Camp, Stop Hinkley, and the Stop Nuclear Power Network. Research and teaching interests include green political thought, feminism, and critical international relations theory.

Per-Anders Svärd is a PhD candidate and teacher in the Department of Political Science, Stockholm University, Sweden. He is also an associate fellow of The Ferrater Mora Oxford Centre for Animal Ethics. With a long background in the animal rights movement, including serving as the president and director of Animal Rights Sweden, he is now completing his dissertation on the history of Swedish animal protection politics. His other research interests include critical theory, Marxism, post structuralism, and psychoanalysis.

Mihnea Tanasescu is a postdoctoral fellow in the Department of Political Science of the Free University (VUB), Brussels, Belgium. His research interests include political representation, environmental political thought, animal political philosophy, environmental ethics, and the theory and practice of rewilding. He has published articles in Environmental Values and the Australian Journal of Political Science, among others.

Marcel Wissenburg is Professor of Political Theory and Head of the Department of Public Administration and Political Science at the Radboud University, Nijmegen, the Netherlands. Previously, he was a visiting professor at Keele University, Keele, Staffs., England, professor of Humanist Philosophy at Wageningen University, the Netherlands, and president of the Dutch Political Science Association. His research interests include environmental political thought, liberalism and libertarianism, social and ecological justice, and animal political philosophy. He has published – in addition to well over 100 articles and book chapters – three international monographs: Green Liberalism (1998), Imperfection and Impartiality (1999), and Political Pluralism and the State (2008), and three edited volumes: European Discourses on Environmental Policy (1999, with Gökhan Orhan and Ute Collier), Sustaining Liberal Democracy (2001, with John Barry), and Liberal Democracy and Environmentalism (2004, with Yoram Levy).
