Preface

This book is based on the lectures on the Law of Domestic Relations for students for the Bachelor of Laws degree that I have delivered for some years at the London School of Economics and Political Science. Much of it was written during special leave in the law libraries of Monash University, Australia and the University of Singapore, and my thanks are due to the staff of these and other law libraries for their ever-ready help and co-operation. I thank also those, especially Mss Jacquie Fleming and Mary Choo, who produced a fair typescript. In the later stages my colleague Mr David Bradley was good enough to read the entire script and make valuable suggestions for improvement. Any views expressed are, of course, entirely my own.

Although this book is intended primarily for law students both in England and Wales and overseas, I hope that others will find it a useful statement of the principal problems and areas of interest in family law today.

The law is given as at 20 August 1976, but some decisions reported to 22 October have been briefly noted.
