Rikke Arnouts holds an M.Sc. in Political Sciences of the Environment and is currently a Ph.D. student at the Forest and Nature Conservation Policy Group of Wageningen University and Research Centre, The Netherlands. He is writing a thesis on governance processes in Dutch nature conservation policy.

Bas Arts is Professor in, and Chair of the Forest and Nature Conservation Policy Group at Wageningen University and Research Centre. His research mainly concerns global environmental governance, and he is particularly interested in new discursive-institutional arrangements in forest and nature policy. He was previously employed as Associate Professor within the Department of Environmental Policy Sciences. Together with Henk van Houtum and Arnoud Lagendijk he founded and coordinated the research programme Governance and Place and co-organised the Conference Mind the GaP on which this volume is based.

Frans Boekema is Professor of Economic Geography at Radboud University Nijmegen and Associate Professor of Regional Economics at Tilburg University. His research focuses on a variety of topics in the field of Economic Geography and Urban and Regional Economics, with emphasis on regional innovation, learning regions, the knowledge economy and regional economic growth and development.

Neil Brenner is Professor in the Department of Sociology and Metropolitan Studies Program, New York University. His research interests include state theory, critical urban political economy, sociospatial theory and comparative urban and regional studies with emphasis on processes of (neoliberal) globalisation and state restructuring.

Philip G. Cerny is Professor of Global Political Economy in the Department of Political Science and the Division of Global Affairs at Rutgers University – Newark (New Jersey). He has written extensively on power and globalisation, world politics and pluralism, international finance and neoliberalism.

Stefan Dormans is Postdoctoral Researcher at the Virtual Knowledge Studio for the Humanities and Social Sciences in Amsterdam. His research interests are in the field of ethnographic methods and narrative-discursive approaches. After having written a Ph.D. in urban and narrative geographies, he is currently focusing on collaborative practices in social and economic history.

Henk van Houtum is Associate Professor in the Department of Human Geography at the Radboud University of Nijmegen. He also is head of the Nijmegen Centre for Border Research. His research interests are borders, (national) identity, home, migration and soccer. Together with Bas Arts and Arnoud Lagendijk he founded and co-ordinated the research programme Governance and Place.

Bob Jessop is Founding Director of the Institute for Advanced Studies, Distinguished Professor of Sociology at Lancaster University. His interests include state theory, Marxist and institutional political economy, governance, the political economy of post-war Britain, changes in the state and welfare regimes, entrepreneurial cities, the knowledge-based economy, and the (il)logic of globalisation.

Arnoud Lagendijk is Associate Professor within the Department of Human Geography and Spatial Planning at Radboud University Nijmegen. His research interests revolve around in regional development, regional policy, and spatial planning, with a particular focus on the role of knowledge and power. Together with Bas Arts and Henk van Houtum he founded the research programme Governance and Place which he is still coordinating.

Sander Meijerink is Assistant Professor at the Department of Spatial Planning at Radboud University Nijmegen. His current research interests include the alignment between water management and spatial planning, policy implementation and the management of trans-boundary river basins.

Roos Pijpers is Assistant Professor in the Department of Human Geography at Radboud University Nijmegen. She is specialising in the 'geography of work', including the migration, mobility, and flexibility of labour, migrant/worker subjectivity, workplace restructuring, and border making, with a keen interest in Eastern Europe.

Bas Spierings is Assistant Professor in the Department of Human Geography & Urban and Regional Planning at Utrecht University. He is focusing on the research themes retailing, city centre developments, urban competition, consumption, shopping and everyday life, and border subjectivities.

Mark Wiering is a Senior Researcher and Assistant Professor in the Department of Political Sciences of the Environment at Radboud University Nijmegen. His research focuses on the institutionalisation of environmental policy and water policy, with a specific interest in the formation of governance arrangements.
