

Them

In order to understand where apathy and entitlement may be coming from in the lower levels of companies, we must look at it from their perspective. Why is communication constantly a problem in corporations no matter the effort spent to improve it? Is there an innate distrust of management and can this be overcome? Why, when we spend millions rolling out initiatives, do they almost always fail to get the desired traction?