In this book series, we defend leisure as a meaningful, theoretical, framing concept; and critical studies of leisure as a worthwhile intellectual and pedagogical activity. This is what makes this book series distinctive: we want to enhance the discipline of leisure studies and open it up to a richer range of ideas; and, conversely, we want sociology, cultural geographies and other social sciences and humanities to open up to engaging with critical and rigorous arguments from leisure studies. Getting beyond concerns about the grand project of leisure, we will use the series to demonstrate that leisure theory is central to understanding wider debates about identity, postmodernity and globalisation in contemporary societies across the world. The series combines the search for local, qualitatively rich accounts of everyday leisure with the international reach of debates in politics, leisure and social and cultural theory. In doing this, we will show that critical studies of leisure can and should continue to play a central role in understanding society. The scope will be global, striving to be truly international and truly diverse in the range of authors and topics.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to acknowledge the generous support of The President's Scholarship for Excellence at Bar-Ilan University, Israel.

I am thankful to a number of people, who helped at various stages of my research and during the writing of this book.

I am indebted to my Ph.D. supervisor, Professor Ilana Friedrich Silber from the Department of Sociology at Bar-Ilan University, for her thoroughness, for sharing her wisdom, and for teaching me to view my work with a critical eye.

My deepest thanks goes to Professor Dalia Gavriely-Nuri, for her encouragement and support, her valuable advice and for making sure I never lost sight of my goal.

I also wish to thank the various members of the faculty in the Sociology Department at Bar-Ilan University; Professor Orly Benjamin, Dr. Ori Schwarz, Dr. Michal Pagis, Dr. Galit Ailon and Dr. Shira Offer, for their guidance and assistance at different stages of my research.

Thanks to the editorial staff at Palgrave Macmillan; to Mary Al-Sayed, the commissioning editor, whose professionalism and efficiency made it a pleasure to work with her, to Linda Braus, for her help, and to the production team for their precision. I also wish to thank the series editor, Karl Spracklen for his confidence in the book and the reviewers, for their enthusiasm and constructive comments.

I wish to express my gratitude to Dr. Avihu Shoshana, for his insightful guidance which supported my first steps in sociological research, and for his encouragement to pursue further research.

I am deeply grateful to my husband and children for believing in me, to my sisters for always being there, and to my loving parents who have been a source of inspiration and taught me the value of critical thinking and social responsibility.

Lastly, I am indebted to the participants of this study who generously shared their time, thoughts and knowledge with me, without which this book would not have been possible.
