

Britain and the World

Series Editors

Martin Farr

School of Historical Studies

Newcastle University

Newcastle Upon Tyne, UK

Michelle D. Brock

Department of History

Washington and Lee University

Lexington, VA, USA

Eric G. E. Zuelow

Department of History

University of New England

Biddeford, ME, USA

Britain and the World is a series of books on ‘British world’ history. The editors invite book proposals from historians of all ranks on the ways in which Britain has interacted with other societies since the seventeenth century. The series is sponsored by the Britain and the World society.

Britain and the World is made up of people from around the world who share a common interest in Britain, its history, and its impact on the wider world. The society serves to link the various intellectual communities around the world that study Britain and its international influence from the seventeenth century to the present. It explores the impact of Britain on the world through this book series, an annual conference, and the Britain and the World journal with Edinburgh University Press.

Martin Farr (martin.farr@newcastle.ac.uk) is the Chair of the British Scholar Society and General Editor for the Britain and the World book series. Michelle D. Brock (brockm@wlu.edu) is Series Editor for titles focusing on the pre-1800 period and Eric G. E. Zuelow (ezuelow@unc.edu) is Series Editor for titles covering the post-1800 period.

More information about this series at <http://www.palgrave.com/gp/series/14795>

Michael Silvestri

Policing 'Bengali Terrorism' in India and the World

Imperial Intelligence and Revolutionary
Nationalism, 1905–1939

palgrave
macmillan

Michael Silvestri
History Department
Clemson University
Clemson, SC, USA

Britain and the World

ISBN 978-3-030-18041-6

ISBN 978-3-030-18042-3 (eBook)

<https://doi.org/10.1007/978-3-030-18042-3>

© The Editor(s) (if applicable) and The Author(s) 2019

This work is subject to copyright. All rights are solely and exclusively licensed by the Publisher, whether the whole or part of the material is concerned, specifically the rights of translation, reprinting, reuse of illustrations, recitation, broadcasting, reproduction on microfilms or in any other physical way, and transmission or information storage and retrieval, electronic adaptation, computer software, or by similar or dissimilar methodology now known or hereafter developed.

The use of general descriptive names, registered names, trademarks, service marks, etc. in this publication does not imply, even in the absence of a specific statement, that such names are exempt from the relevant protective laws and regulations and therefore free for general use. The publisher, the authors and the editors are safe to assume that the advice and information in this book are believed to be true and accurate at the date of publication. Neither the publisher nor the authors or the editors give a warranty, express or implied, with respect to the material contained herein or for any errors or omissions that may have been made. The publisher remains neutral with regard to jurisdictional claims in published maps and institutional affiliations.

Cover illustration: The Print Collector / Alamy Stock Photo

This Palgrave Macmillan imprint is published by the registered company Springer Nature Switzerland AG

The registered company address is: Gewerbestrasse 11, 6330 Cham, Switzerland

For my parents

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This book has had a long and winding history, and in the process of researching and writing it, I have piled up an extraordinary number of debts. I first approached the topic of colonial policing in a PhD dissertation at Columbia University, and although only traces of the original thesis remain in the present study, the intellectual and financial support I received at Columbia was critical to this book's genesis. Sir David Cannadine was an enthusiastic and supportive dissertation supervisor and I was fortunate to benefit from the insights of a truly outstanding dissertation committee: David Armitage, Sugata Bose, Leonard Gordon, and Ayesha Jalal. Ayesha's suggestion that I explore Sir John Anderson's career in Bengal has led me down many profitable avenues of historical research in subsequent years. Needless to say, neither she nor any of the individuals mentioned in these acknowledgments are responsible for any deficiencies of fact or interpretation in this book.

I owe an enormous debt as well to the archives and libraries in which I have researched and written this book and in particular to the staff of the Asia, Pacific, and Africa Collections of the British Library. Over the years, they have been unfailingly helpful with my research questions and research requests and have made the Asian and African Studies reading room quite simply the best place in the world to think about, research, and write about South Asian and British imperial history. At Clemson University, the staff of the Resource Sharing Office of the Cooper Library have tolerated my innumerable requests for books, articles, and other materials and have done an outstanding job of providing them.

A number of institutions have generously supported the research in the United States, the United Kingdom, and India on which this book is based. I gratefully acknowledge the support of the Council for European Studies, Columbia University; the American Institute for Indian Studies; and the Harry Frank Guggenheim Foundation for supporting the initial research for this project. More recent research was funded by the American Philosophical Society, which awarded me a Franklin Research Grant; and by the History Department; the College of Architecture, Arts and Humanities; the Humanities Advancement Board; and the University Research Grants Committee of Clemson University.

Some material in this book appeared previously in my article “The Bomb, Bhadralok, Bhagavad Gita and Dan Breen: Terrorism in Bengal and Its Relation to the European Experience,” which appeared in Terrorism and Political Violence in 2009.

I am also grateful to many individuals for inviting me to present my research at workshops, conferences, and seminars and for sharpening my fuzzy thoughts on imperial intelligence and “Bengali terrorism.” I thank Andy Syk, John Horne, and Robert Gerwarth for inviting me to participate in the joint University College Dublin-Trinity College Dublin conference on Paramilitary Violence in Europe after the Great War in 2010. Thanks to Satoshi Mizutani for organizing an outstanding 2013 conference at Doshisha University, Kyoto, Japan, on the transnational trajectories of the Indian nationalist struggle. Bill Meier invited me to take part in a very productive workshop on terrorism and violence at the 2014 Midwest Victorian Studies Association conference, while Kim Wagner organized and led a stimulating and collegial workshop on colonial violence at Queen Mary College, University of London, in 2015. Audiences at the British Scholar Conference and the Pacific Coast Conference on British Studies in 2017 provided valuable feedback and encouragement.

The late Sabyaschi Mukherjee was generous in sharing materials which he had collected on Calcutta Police Commissioner Charles Tegart. Jeremy Inghen provided insights on his grandfather, police intelligence officer R. E. A. Ray, and shared excerpts from his grandmother Marion Ray’s diaries. Along with other historians of late colonial Bengal, I am indebted to Dr. Amiya K. Samanta, former Director of the West Bengal Police Intelligence Branch. Dr. Samanta facilitated the research process while I was a graduate student in Kolkata, and his publication of documentary collections on “Bengali terrorism” has provided a valuable resource for historians at a time when access to colonial-era materials on this subject can still be difficult.

A number of other individuals have provided important critical perspectives, assistance, and encouragement. I thank in particular Brian Drohan, Richard Hill, Harald Fischer-Tiné, Durba Ghosh, Eunan O’Halpin, Heather Streets-Salter, and Kim Wagner. Conversations with Kate O’Malley have helped me to understand the mentalities of both imperial intelligence officers and anticolonial activists, while my colleague Mou Banerjee has not only provided warm encouragement but also shared her deep knowledge of colonial India. My visits with Ed, Claire, and William Moisson have been the highlight of my research trips to London.

A draft chapter benefitted from a critical reading by Heather Streets-Salter, while an early version of the introduction benefitted from the comments of my friends and colleagues Steve Marks and James Burns. The students in my graduate seminar on empire in the Fall 2018 semester buoyed my spirits and helped me refine my arguments as I completed the final manuscript. Gail Nagel was a careful and critical reader and an enthusiastic supporter of this project.

At Palgrave Macmillan, I thank Molly Beck, Maeve Sinnott, and the series editors for their enthusiasm about this book and for their help with the publication process. The careful and critical reading of the anonymous reader at Palgrave provided comments and suggestions that have immeasurably improved the final manuscript.

Ellie, Lizzie, and Bear care little, as far as I can tell, about British history, but I am grateful for their daily reminders that there is more to life than writing books.

As with past projects, my biggest thanks are reserved for my wife and fellow British historian Stephanie Barczewski. Stephanie has been hearing about imperial intelligence and revolutionary nationalism in various forms for as long as she has known me; nonetheless, she has never complained when I have inflicted my work upon her and her careful and critical comments have helped me shape this book from its earliest unwieldy and inchoate incarnations. Even more importantly, I value beyond words what Stephanie has contributed to our life together.

This book is dedicated to my parents, John and Carol, who have offered unstinting love, support, and encouragement over the years.

CONTENTS

1	Introduction: Imperial Intelligence and a Forgotten Insurgency	1
	Part I Policing Revolutionary Terrorism in Bengal	23
2	The “Bomb Cult” and “Criminal Tribes”: Revolutionaries and the Origins of Police Intelligence in Colonial Bengal	25
3	Surveillance, Analysis, and Violence: The Operations of the Bengal Police Intelligence Branch	75
4	Intelligence Failures, Militarization, and Rehabilitation: The Anti-Terrorist Campaign After the Chittagong Armoury Raid	127
	Part II The Wider World	185
5	Transnational Revolutionaries and Imperial Surveillance: Bengal Revolutionary Networks Outside India	187

6 Spies, Sailors, and Revolutionaries: Bengal Revolutionaries, Indian Political Intelligence, and International Arms Smuggling	233
7 Intelligence Expertise and Imperial Threats: Bengal Intelligence Officers in North America, Europe, and Asia	279
8 Epilogue: Bengal Intelligence Officers and the Second World War	327
Bibliography	341
Index	353

LIST OF TABLES

Table 3.1	Bengal Police Central Intelligence Branch Staff	80
Table 3.2	Bengal Police District Intelligence Branch Staff	82