Scope of the Series

Contemporary Philosophies and Theories in Education signifies new directions and possibilities out of a traditional field of philosophy and education. Around the globe, exciting scholarship that breaks down and reformulates traditions in the humanities and social sciences is being created in the field of education scholarship. This series provides a venue for publication by education scholars whose work reflect the dynamic and experimental qualities that characterize today's academy.

The series associates philosophy and theory not exclusively with a cognitive interest (to know, to define, to order) or an evaluative interest (to judge, to impose criteria of validity) but also with an experimental and attentive attitude which is characteristic for exercises in thought that try to find out how to move in the present and how to deal with the actual spaces and times, the different languages and practices of education and its transformations around the globe. It addresses the need to draw on thought across all sorts of borders and counts amongst its elements the following: the valuing of diverse processes of inquiry; an openness to various forms of communication, knowledge, and understanding; a willingness to always continue experimentation that incorporates debate and critique; and an application of this spirit, as implied above, to the institutions and issues of education.

Authors for the series come not only from philosophy of education but also from curriculum studies and critical theory, social sciences theory, and humanities theory in education. The series incorporates volumes that are trans- and inner-disciplinary.

The audience for the series includes academics, professionals and students in the fields of educational thought and theory, philosophy and social theory, and critical scholarship.

Acknowledgments

We have written this book while the two of us live and work in two different continents—Europe and Africa—something that could not be more symbolic of our longtime struggle to define a critical decolonial knowledge project in human rights education that extends beyond the epistemological form of European imperialism. Each of these continents has contributed something unique to our experiences of thinking, feeling, being, and writing. Each of these continents and beyond has given us the gift of many colleagues, friends, and students, who have helped us formulate our ideas and pushed us to be more bold and critical of our own taken-for-granted ideas. We are especially grateful for the support and intellectual stimulation we received from Shirley Anne Tate, Felisa Tibbitts, Monisha Bajaj, Willy Nel, Ronelle Carolissen, J.C de Merwe, Jonathan Jansen, Lis Lange, Vivienne Bozalek, and Tammy Shefer. We also thank Marisa Botha and Jenny du Preez for their enormous investment of time in offering editorial help. Finally, our deep appreciation goes to our families whose encouragement and love enable us to do what we do.
