

Affect Theory, Shame, and Christian Formation

Stephanie N. Arel

Affect Theory, Shame, and Christian Formation

palgrave
macmillan

Stephanie N. Arel
Boston University
Boston, Massachusetts, USA

ISBN 978-3-319-42591-7 ISBN 978-3-319-42592-4 (eBook)
DOI 10.1007/978-3-319-42592-4

Library of Congress Control Number: 2016957388

© The Editor(s) (if applicable) and The Author(s) 2016

This work is subject to copyright. All rights are solely and exclusively licensed by the Publisher, whether the whole or part of the material is concerned, specifically the rights of translation, reprinting, reuse of illustrations, recitation, broadcasting, reproduction on microfilms or in any other physical way, and transmission or information storage and retrieval, electronic adaptation, computer software, or by similar or dissimilar methodology now known or hereafter developed.

The use of general descriptive names, registered names, trademarks, service marks, etc. in this publication does not imply, even in the absence of a specific statement, that such names are exempt from the relevant protective laws and regulations and therefore free for general use. The publisher, the authors and the editors are safe to assume that the advice and information in this book are believed to be true and accurate at the date of publication. Neither the publisher nor the authors or the editors give a warranty, express or implied, with respect to the material contained herein or for any errors or omissions that may have been made.

Cover image © Paul Quemper / EyeEm

Printed on acid-free paper

This Palgrave Macmillan imprint is published by Springer Nature
The registered company is Springer International Publishing AG Switzerland
The registered company address is: Gewerbestrasse 11, 6330 Cham, Switzerland

For Rebecca

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I feel deep gratitude and joy that so many people have been willing to engage in my work. Several people have provided significant aid and ideas that have made this book possible. Among those who have contributed, I owe particular thanks to a few.

I profoundly thank Shelly Rambo, who supported this work at its infancy. She has given me consistent feedback on my writing and has provided countless opportunities for me to share and receive comments on my work. Her discerning insights into both the ideas and the writing, along with her commitment to my project, have been invaluable. Bryan Stone has, since the beginning of my matriculation at Boston University, been a trustworthy, insightful, and consistent mentor, guiding me at critical junctures while encouraging great freedom to explore my topic. My friends and esteemed colleagues Xochitl Alvizo and Kathryn House both contributed generously to the process of writing this book at pivotal points and have endured with me through it all. The Center of Practical Theology at Boston University supported this project since its insemination. Thanks also to Wesley Wildman, Anjulet Tucker, and Steven Sandage, faculty members who have met with me at different times to guide my writing, challenge me intellectually, and help me complete this text.

I am grateful for the editors at Palgrave Macmillan. I appreciate the generous support of Phil Getz and Alexis Nelson, who saw this process through to its fruition.

I had the opportunity to present many parts of this work to various groups. For this, many thanks go to the Body and Religion Group of American Academy of Religion and the Pacific Northwest Region of American Academy of Religion, especially Anne-Marie Ellithorpe, who encouraged me through Chapter 5 with precise thinking on friendship, solidarity, and empathy. This same chapter garnered feedback and reflection by those at the Trauma and Lived Religion Conference, Amsterdam, Netherlands. I thank R. Ruard Ganzevoort for his reflections on trauma and Srdjan Sremac for his astute observations, and continual support, of the work on touch and shame.

Many thanks to the American Association of University Women whose fellowship supported this work at its earliest stages. I owe particular gratitude to several members of the Society for Ricoeur Studies, including George Taylor, Dan Stiver, Roger Savage, Todd Mei, and Joseph Edelheit, who have supported my interdisciplinary work integrating shame and trauma with philosophy since I began to undertake it. The 2016 Intercontinental Academia, jointly sponsored by the Israel Institute for Advanced Study at Hebrew University and the Zentrum für interdisziplinäre Forschung of Bielefeld University in Germany, provided a platform for thinking about trauma and shame in the context of human dignity. I appreciate the members' support and encouragement at the final stages of the project.

I am especially grateful to the participants—religious leaders, theologians, and a variety of healthcare workers and healing professionals—of the Journey to Healing International Conference, Belfast, Ireland, where I first spoke about shame in the context of war, addressing the experiences of women survivors of rape during the Rwandan genocide, US soldiers returning from war with posttraumatic stress disorder (PTSD) symptoms, and cultures, like those in Belfast and Bosnia, steeped in war and violence. Two priests from Belfast and a therapist of African victims of torture shared about deep wounds suffered in war, urging me to continue this work.

Thank-you to my family members and those who have been like family, supporting and encouraging this process: Denice, Garry, Courtney, YT, Steven, Christina, Chris, Sydney, Shianne, Sally, Nathan, Judy, Bill, Margena, Marian, Tiffany, Lynne, Laurie, Vanessa, Nancy, Garry, June, Amy, Doug, Jamie, Ronnie, Bill, Kathy, Arlene, Jessica, Nancy, Tonya, and Gina. A special thank-you to Andrew for his continual contributions to deepening this work and without whose unflagging support this book would not have been possible.

Finally, I dedicate this book to Rebecca Daugherty, who deserves more thanks than I can give her here.

CONTENTS

1	Introduction	1
2	Interpreting Shame Affectively	23
3	The Cover-Up	63
4	Masked Shame	91
5	Touching Shame: A Pathway to Disinterment	125
6	Empathic Engagement	159
7	Conclusion	177
	Bibliography	185
	Index	203