Contemporary Anthropology of Religion is the official book series of the Society for the Anthropology of Religion, a section of the American Anthropological Association. Books in the series explore a variety of issues relating to current theoretical or comparative issues in the study of religion. These include the relation between religion and the body, social memory, gender, ethnoreligious violence, globalization, modernity, and multiculturalism, among others. Recent historical events have suggested that religion plays a central role in the contemporary world, and Contemporary Anthropology of Religion provides a crucial forum for the expansion of our understanding of religion globally.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book would not have been possible without the support of countless mentors and colleagues, friends, informants and assistants in the field, foundations, institutions, and beyond. Let me try to count them in an efficient way that will not bore you.

For close and critical readings of material related to the book, I thank Robert Hefner, Nancy Smith-Hefner, Robert Weller, Charles Lindholm, Jenny White, Kimberly Arkin, FRED comrades at Boston University, Rachel Rinaldo, Daniel Birchock, fellows in SEAR at the University of Michigan, Dan Slater, and Anna Tsing. I would also like to thank all the anonymous reviewers, for providing insights for revision on the earlier versions of all the materials.

Too many people who nourished my research in the field cannot be named; they showed great assistance and hospitality, nonetheless. Those who can be named are Intan Kusuma, Kristia Rachmawati, Ibu Slamet Rahayu, Ibu Suparni, Catherine Elvin, Mungki Vitaresti, Yosef Djakababa, Neny Isharyanti, Sumanto Al-Qurtuby, Kusumaningtyas Purwanti, Ina Hunga, Bowo, Gigih, Ibu Sri Untari, Pak Zulfa Machasin, Ibu Siti Nurwakhidah, Erna, Nur, Farida, Mira, Toni, Fosa, Ivon, Meli, Micky, Christopher, Petra, and Stephen. Special thanks go to the Gender Studies Center at Satya Wacana Christian University, State Institute for Islamic Studies of Salatiga, Aisyiyah Muhammadiyah Salatiga, Fatayat Nahdlatul Ulama Salatiga, and Himpunan Mahasiswa Islam Salatiga.

The research and writing for this book were carried out under a National Science Foundation Dissertation Grant (USA), an Education Ministry Study Abroad Scholarship (Taiwan), fellowships from the Anthropology Department at Boston University, a Mellon/ACLS Dissertation Completion Fellowship, a Postdoctoral Fellowship from the Center for Asia-Pacific Area Studies of RCHSS at Academia Sinica, and a research project supported by Taiwan's Ministry of Science and Technology. I am especially grateful to the Sociology Department at National Sun Yat-sen University, where I have worked with great colleagues and was able to write while I taught.

I have presented parts of this manuscript in its earlier stages at Boston University, the University of Michigan, University of California, Los Angeles, Gajah Mada University, the Annual Meeting of the American Anthropological Association, Middle Eastern Technology University, National Tsing-Hua University, and Academia Sinica.

Special thanks to Nat Tuohy, who has been my first reader and diligent editor for years. I am lucky to have Michelle Chae and Jim Chao, who have always given me encouragement at the various low points of my life. Finally, I wish to acknowledge the support of all my eccentric family members, although actually, none of them really read ethnography, or any book in English for that matter.

Fig. 6.2	At the end of a PKK meeting, food was served in Graha in July, 2010. The dish that day was soto ayam , an Indonesian dish made of chicken broth stewed with cumin, coriander, and other spices topped with hand-torn chicken strips to be served with rice or glass noodles. Chopped cucumbers, tiny carrot cubes, fried shallots, whole green chili peppers, and raw bean sprouts were placed in separate bowls to be added along with the broth later	167

The poster on the right is a gift from a Pentecostal friend of the Protestant family. It says Rumah Mujizat or “House of Miracles”	174
