For Angela, a woman of valor

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

“All beginnings are hard,” Chaim Potok wrote. This book took a decade to begin. In 1999, Karen Mura, a colleague at Susquehanna University, suggested that I teach a course on Jane Austen and film, which opened the door. In 2010, my husband pointed out a poster for the latest film version of Gulliver’s Travels, and this project set out.

Since then I have built a long list of other people to thank. Seton Hall’s University Research Council awarded me a research fellowship and my department granted me a course release. Melissa Martini told me about Animal Island, and Catherine Wiatrowski was a fine research assistant. The students in my fall 2014 graduate seminar in “Literary, Material, and Digital Jane” refined my thinking with their excellent questions and insights. Donovan Sherman, Angela Weisl, and Jonathan Farina provided incisive feedback on early versions of several chapters, and Angela took me out for yet another life-altering lunch. Jim Kimble, Amy Hunter, Martha Easton, and Kirsten Schultz kept me on track with their dedication, discipline, and friendship. Veronica Armour worked wonders with technology. Alan Delozier, Mabel Wong, Lisa Rose Wiles, Marta Deyrup, and Anthony Lee of Walsh Library were and are indefatigable and generous beyond measure.

I have the pleasure of debts elsewhere as well. Some materials in Chaps. 2 and 5 have been published previously in “Tidying as We Go: Constructing the Eighteenth Century Through Adaptation in Becoming Jane, Crusoe, and Gulliver’s Travels” in Studies in Eighteenth-Century Culture 43 (Spring 2014): 219–37. I acknowledge the generosity of the American Association for Eighteenth-Century Studies in allowing me to draw upon this article. Further thanks to Eve Tavor Bannet, Vickie Cutting, Tim Erwin, Susan Allen Ford, Aleksandra Hultquist, Alyssa Johns, Devoney Looser, Mary Ann O'Donnell, and Linda Troost. For years, John O'Neill has been inspiring me to be a better scholar, colleague, and person. Thank you, John. Marilyn Francus supplied the invaluable gifts of expertise, encouragement, and spectacular chocolate. Borrowing from Laurence Sterne, I ask my readers to imagine the most heartfelt, comprehensive expression of gratitude that they would like to receive and consider it tendered to Laura Engel. I cannot write anything adequate to the task.

Thanks, thanks, and more thanks to my extended family, especially my parents and in-laws. Only people who really support you aren't hurt that you bring your computer when you come to stay with them. To my husband and children, all I can say is thank you. You know what for.
