Acknowledgements

The research that went into this work was supported by the Berlin-Brandenburg Academy of Sciences and Humanities, the Max Planck Institute for the History of Science, the Institute for Research in the Humanities (University of Bucharest) and the University of Milan (Statale). It also benefited from a short visiting research period at Princeton University. I must thank Eberhard Knobloch, Vincenzo Di Risi, Dana Jalobeanu, Mihnea Dobre, Stefano Di Bella, Gianfranco Mormino and Daniel Garber for their direct support of this project. O. Bradley Bassler first set me on the Leibnizian path. I would also like to thank the many scholars in the field of early modern (and Leibniz) studies who helped solidify my project: Richard T.W. Arthur, Edward Slowik, David Rabouin, Valérie Debuiche, Emily Grosholz, François Duchesneau, Maarten Van Dyck, Maria Rosa Antognazza, Charles Wolfe, Tobias Cheung, Stephen Howard, Lucian Petrescu, Davide Crippa, Ansgar Lyssy, Erdmann Görg, Kirsten Walsh, J. Colin Mcquillan, Christopher Noble, John Bova, Tal Glazer, Anne-Lise Rey, Lucio Mare, Luca Guzzardi, Rodolfo Garau, Pietro Omodeo, Angela Axworthy, Delphine Bellis, Karin Verelst, Arnaud Pelletier, Ursula Goldenbaum, Lloyd Strickland, Amanda Hicks, and Justin E. H. Smith. Special thanks also go to the two blind reviewers of the manuscript who pointed out some ambiguities and embarrassing mistakes, and to Andrew Ascherl for his invaluable proofreading help.

This work would also have been impossible without the support of my friends. To Pietro Bianchi, Giuseppe Bianco, Olivier Surel, Samo Tomšič, Krisha McCune, Benjamin Bishop, Patricia Goldsworthy, Bruno Besana, Mae Liou, Aleks Zarnitsyn, Etienne Chambaud, Valentina Suma, Eve Richens, Brian Howell, Nate Vacher, Ryan Anderson, Daniel Kugler, and Victor Lao, I owe a debt of gratitude.
