Literatures, Cultures, and the Environment focuses on new research in the Environmental Humanities, particularly work with a rhetorical or literary dimension. Books in this series explore how ideas of nature and environmental concerns are expressed in different cultural contexts and at different historical moments. They investigate how cultural assumptions and practices, as well as social structures and institutions, shape conceptions of nature, the natural, species boundaries, uses of plants, animals and natural resources, the human body in its environmental dimensions, environmental health and illness, and relations between nature and technology. In turn, the series makes visible how concepts of nature and forms of environmentalist thought and representation arise from the confluence of a community's ecological and social conditions with its cultural assumptions, perceptions, and institutions.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I owe a debt of gratitude to my husband Baler, my parents Semra and Oğuz, and my brother Haluk for their unyielding love and support throughout this project and other lifelong curiosities, and to my daughter Nil who gifted us with her arrival shortly after completion of this book.

I would like to thank Steven Taubeneck, Jen Currin, Nazmi Ağıl, Zeynep Direk, Rainer J. Hanshe, and the anonymous reader for their invaluable comments and criticism, the poets of vertigo west for introducing me to Juliana Spahr's poetry several years ago, and Ilgim Ververi Alaca for allowing me to use her artwork, "Maya's Forest," on the front cover. I am grateful to Ursula Heise for taking an interest in this project, and to Allie Bochicchio and Emily Janakiram for easing the publishing process at Palgrave-Macmillan.
